On March 7th, 2003, armed agents of Michael Chertoff's so-called Joint Terrorism Task Force descended on the home of Chester Doles, Jr. and his family in the mountains near Dahlonega, Georgia, and arrested him on completely bogus firearms charges.

Chester Doles, Jr. is a family man, a father of 11 children, a professional carpenter, a university student of political science — and he has the audacity to believe that White people in Georgia ought to have some rights. He organized a National Alliance Unit in his region. His leadership was and is exemplary.

Ten years before, Mr. Doles had gone to jail in Maryland over an assault. It was a misdemeanor offense — not a felony. But because Mr. Doles' sentence was for over twelve months, the Jewish Chertoff gang in the Justice Department is claiming that an obscure provision in the law which prevents felons from owning firearms also prevents anyone sentenced — even for a misdemeanor — to a year or more from owning any gun.

It doesn't matter to them that the guns didn't belong to Chester Doles. It doesn't matter to them that not only did Mr. Doles, his wife, and their eleven children live in the home, but that numbers of extended family members were often present, all of whom were perfectly within their rights to own and carry firearms there. It doesn't matter to them that every single one of the seven weapons they claimed they found were the same kind of weapons — handguns, shotguns, and rifles — that can be found in almost every household in the north Georgia mountains. It also apparently doesn't matter that Mr. Doles, when his jail term was up, was specifically informed by his local parole office that his right to own firearms had been reinstated. This is a case of a Jewish criminal element within the government targeting a man because of his political beliefs, following him, and sending paid spies to falsely testify against him. continued on page 22

Inside the 'Axis of Evil'

A White Nationalist Visits Iran

by Eric Richardson

AFTER FOURTEEN SLEEPLESS HOURS in an airplane, I shuffled tiredly past the duty-free stand with its display cases of perfumes and watches, cigarettes and candies. Its listless cashier watched as the crowd jockeyed for position behind one of the half dozen Customs line-ups that were forming. Her eyes met mine briefly, but it was the piercing gaze of the photographs above the duty-free stand which caught my attention. Images of the Ayatollah Khomeini, and his successor Ayatollah Khamenei, would be omnipresent during my stay in the Islamic Republic of Iran — and it is telling that one of my most vivid memories of this oft-maligned state would be my first encounter with their stare.

The story of how a National Alliance member found himself standing in Tehran's Mehrabad Airport begins on January 29, 2002, when President George W. Bush raised hypocrisy to new heights during his now-infamous State of the Union Address. Wearing his trademark schoolboy smirk, George Bush introduced the world to the "Axis of Evil," an illogical construct designed to provide convenient targets, both for the hatred of the masses and for a military ill-suited to confronting nebulous organizations like al-Qaeda.[1]

The invention of the "Axis of Evil" was a logical extension of his brazen lie of four months before, which blamed the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001 neither on Washington's subservience to Israel, nor on the American military presence in Saudi Arabia, but rather on a claimed irrational hatred on the part of the terrorists and their backers for "our freedoms."[2]

Tehran's Freedom Monument

Thinking men and women saw through this transparent explanation immediately, and recognized the "war on terrorism" for what it really was: yet another offensive to further Israel's interests in the Middle East and replace once-sovereign nations with subservient puppet regimes.

It is an unfortunate fact, however, that thinking men and women are a minority in our society, and I quickly found myself embroiled in debates with the usual cast of jingoistic lemmings. "Saddam Hussein wants to take over the world! He's the next Hitler!" one of my colleagues parroted. "In Iran they stone women to death for revealing their ankles!" said another. When I responded to their ignorance with careful research and

1. "States like these [Iran, Iraq, North Korea], and their terrorist allies, constitute an axis of evil, arming to threaten the peace of the world. By seeking weapons of mass destruction, these regimes pose a grave and growing danger. They could provide these arms to terrorists, giving them the means to match their hatred. They could attack our allies or attempt to blackmail the United States. In any of these cases, the price of indifference would be catastrophic." President George Bush, State of the Union Address, January 29, 2002.

2. "Americans are asking, why do they hate us? They hate what we see right here in this chamber — a democratically elected government. Their leaders are self-appointed. They hate our freedoms — our freedom of religion, our freedom of speech, our freedom to vote and assemble and disagree with each other." President George Bush, Address to a Joint Session of Congress and the American People, September 20, 2001.

measured words, I was faced with disbelief and suspicion. On one occasion, a woman closed the conversation with the rhetorical question, "How do you know? Have you been there?" Having delivered her coup de grâce, she smugly walked away in triumph, secure in the belief that her world, with its comfortable and non-threatening boundaries, had been defended.

Unbeknownst to my smug acquaintance, I accepted her question as a challenge, and decided at that moment to embark upon a journey into the "Axis of Evil," to defy the censors of the controlled media, and to experience firsthand the people and the politics of Iran.[3]

Arrival

Jet lag always weighs heavy on me, and the morning after my arrival in Iran was no exception. My day began with a rude introduction to the 'fine art' of dodging traffic, both on and off the sidewalk. Shadowing locals as they crossed chaotic intersections, devoid of crosswalks or overpasses, I cautiously made my way to the nearest newspaper stand. Besides providing a harrowing experience for Western tourists, twelve-million-strong Tehran produces stifling smog, which obliterates all but fleeting glimpses of the Alborz Mountains towering over the city. Safely back in my hotel, I read the Tehran Times[4], listened to the resident songbirds, and calmed my nerves over a strong cup of tea.

Despite the claim that English has become the new lingua franca, I discovered that only a small minority of the population could speak English fluently. Luckily, I had arranged to be met in Tehran by an interpreter, who, during my stay in Iran not only acted as my guide and helped me to navigate through the local bureaucracy, but also proved quite willing to discuss what in North America would have been taboo topics: Zionism and Jewish media control.

Images of the Ayatollahs are omnipresent in the Islamic Republic. They can be seen here on billboards, posters in marketplaces, and on the sides of buildings. The image at the lower right carries an English translation of its Farsi legend: "Obedience to Imam Khomeini."

'We Are Not Arabs!'

"So, how does it feel to be in the 'Axis of Evil'?" I looked up to see the smiling face of a barrel-chested Tehrani who, having spotted my newspaper, was eager to engage me in conversation. "Are you an American?" he quickly asked, giving me no time to respond to his first question. "I have wanted to speak with an American and ask him about this so-called 'axis' for a long time." Confused at having been linked to distant North Korea, and troubled at having been tied to their old foe Iraq, Iranians were fascinated by this topic and returned to it again and again. The "Axis of Evil" is an exclusive club. Not only must one be accused of pursuing "weapons of mass destruction," and supporting 'terrorist' organizations, but the applicant must also be a vocal and long-standing opponent of American foreign policy; Israel, Washington's "gallant little ally in the Middle East," need not apply.

I risked broaching the first allegation, that Iran was pursuing "weapons of mass destruction," with an Iranian Air Force officer who I met en route to Esfahân. He hesitantly replied that although the Iranian military was very large and was capable of defending its borders from aggressors, that its equipment was largely antiquated by Western standards. As a helicopter pilot, he gestured towards his own first-generation Huey Cobra gunship, and pointedly asked, "If we cannot afford new helicopters, how do you think that we could purchase nuclear missiles?"

3. I chose to visit Iran, rather than Iraq or North Korea, for a number of reasons. As a matter of practicality, Iran is easier to visit than either Iraq or North Korea. As a racialist, I was also drawn to Iran because of the Indo-European lineage of the Persians. Neither Iraq nor North Korea, with the exception of Iraq's Indo-European-derived Kurdish minority, share an Aryan heritage with the West.

4. The Tehran Times is one of two English-language newspapers that I encountered in Iran. The Tehran Times regularly publishes articles from an anti-Zionist and pro-Palestinian standpoint, and is available online at http://www.tehrantimes.com.

America's reputation as a source of cannon fodder, money, and functionaries for the Zionists is well-known in Iran. The English translation of the advertisement next to an Iranian parking lot, top, reads "We will make America face a severe defeat." The spontaneous graffiti below needs no translation.

There is more truth to the second allegation, that Iran supports 'terrorist' organizations, so long as you accept Washington's definition of 'terrorist.' Hezbollah is widely regarded as a terrorist organization in the West, despite its standing in Lebanon as a recognized political party and its operation of schools, hospitals and other charities within that war-torn country. Iran came to the aid of Hezbollah[5] during its prolonged guerilla war, which ended with the withdrawal of the misnamed Israeli Defense Force from southern Lebanon in 2000. The support provided to Hezbollah is openly acknowledged in Iran, and is justified due to religious affinity (Hezbollah, like Iran, is Shiite Muslim), sympathy for the Lebanese people, and a desire to strike a blow against Zionist repression.

Although Iranians confidently spoke of their support for Hezbollah in its struggle for national liberation, they were careful to distance themselves from those that would export 'terrorism' to the West. Specifically, the Iranians that I spoke with agreed that the events of September 11 were a terrible tragedy, just as it is a tragedy whenever innocents are killed. However, they also recognized the hypocrisy which rewards with arms and funding the high-tech terrorism of the Israeli Defense Force, yet condemns as criminals those who respond to Israeli aggression with the more primitive means at their disposal.

While allegations of nuclear proliferation and terrorism may have dire consequences in the future, the suggestion that Iran is in some way connected with the Iraqi regime in these forbidden pursuits was more often the topic of conversation, producing strong denials from bewildered Iranians.

In Iran, one cannot escape images of the war with Iraq; and Iranians far too young to have experienced the bloody 1980-1988 conflict firsthand are reminded of it daily, most dramatically by the prominent murals dedicated to Iran's war dead, which line avenues and tower over intersections. With memories of the war still fresh in the Iranian psyche, being accused of conspiring with Baghdad, no matter how indirectly, is seen as insulting and further evidence of America's ignorance of the region.

During one conversation, which drifted uncontrollably towards the implied Iraqi connection, an incredulous shopkeeper asked, "Don't you Americans realize that we are not Arabs?"

Indo-European Heritage

The Aryan migration into the Iranian plateau, between the end of the second and the beginning of the first millennium B.C., left an undeniable stamp on Iran. While racial ties to Europe have been frayed by innumerable migrations through Iran over time, the Persians are proud of their distant Aryan origins and insulted by Westerners who would mistake them for their Arab or Turkic neighbors.[6]

Reminders of the might of the Persian Empire, which at its height in 500 B.C. stretched from the Indus River in the East through to Libya and Greece

America's foreign policy is not popular in Iran.

5. Hezbollah's military wing continues to be active along the Israeli border and at the Shebaa Farms. Occupied in 1967, the Shebaa Farms is the last remnant of Israeli-occupied Lebanon. While the U.N. alleges that the Shebaa Farms, along with the Golan Heights, is occupied Syrian territory, both Lebanon and Syria support Lebanese sovereignty over the ten square kilometer parcel.

in the West, are found everywhere. Dwarfed by the colossal ruins at Persepolis[7], I tried to imagine how the complex must have looked over twenty-three centuries earlier. I later climbed up to the hillside tomb of Artaxerxes III, which, carved out of solid rock, stands as a silent sentry above Persepolis. Alone, except for the lizards which scrambled hastily from my path, I thought of a young David Duke, who in 1971[8] traveled through another once-Aryan nation, India. Struck by the beauty of the old temples which dot the subcontinent, he made the decision "not to be depressed by the ugliness and the decay," but to "resurrect in [his] imagination the once beautiful, magnificent empire of India." I wondered how many other travelers had stood in similar awe overlooking Persepolis, before the Pyramids at Cairo, or like Duke at an ancient and crumbling temple to a Vedic deity — and saw morbidly into a future in which others may stand in similar wonderment before the ruins of our misguided civilization.

Ancient Persian warrior

Modern Iranian girl; a few Iranians are quite European-looking.

While I was familiar with the Indo-European lineage of the Persians, and with their historical accomplishments, I was surprised by how many of today's Persians, especially in Tehran, have retained the fair skin and features of their Aryan ancestors. A small minority of the Persians, in fact, would have no difficulty passing physically for Europeans.[9] This was in contrast to the admittedly small number of Iranians that I had met in North America, whose dark complexions and alien features had not suggested any kinship with our race.

The reality of Aryan features within the swarthy crowd was exemplified by an encounter I had outside of the German Embassy. Passing the embassy on my way to exchange currency at a nearby bank, I noticed a man staring intently at a street map, his light brown hair and blue eyes providing contrast to the surrounding crowd. As he was still staring at his map upon my return, I approached him and asked him if he was lost. He looked up from the map, incomprehension written across his face. My attempt at "Sprechen Sie Deutsches?" provoked a similar response. "Ferengi?" he inquired, using the now-familiar term for "Westerner."[10] With the impasse broken, I came to the embarrassing realization that I had come to the assistance, not of a tourist, but of a local in whose blood a strong trace of the West still flowed.

C.I.A. Coup, Oppression

No other event better symbolizes the gulf between the United States and Iran than the storming of the U.S. Embassy in 1979, an event that has become a defining symbol of the Islamic Revolution — an Alamo in reverse, if you will. Through American eyes, the attack and the ensuing hostage crisis was a blight on the nation's honor and a time for strong talk and yellow ribbons. Through Iranian eyes, however, the storming of the embassy was a triumph, and a preventative measure against a repeat of the events of 1953, when the C.I.A. orchestrated a coup to overthrow

6. Iran is roughly 50% Persian (Indo-European), with the remainder of the population being composed of numerous Turkic, Kurdish, and Arabic minority groups. Religion, rather than race, is the unifying force in Iran, with approximately 90% of the population being Shiite Muslim. Farsi, the official language of Iran, is a member of the Indo-European family of languages. Despite the introduction of an Arabic-style script following the Islamic conquest in the seventh century A.D., Farsi continues to have much in common with the languages of Europe.

7. Persepolis, which served as the royal court of the Aryan kings of Persia, including Darius and Xerxes, was destroyed by another Aryan, Alexander the Great, in 330 B.C. The burning of Persepolis is said to have been in retaliation for the destruction of Athens by the Persians in 480 B.C.

8. David Duke, My Awakening (Covington, Louisiana: Free Speech Press, 2000, available from National Vanguard Books), page 517.

9. My very unscientific head-count in Tehran suggested that somewhere between 5 and 10% of the population could pass for European. In other parts of Iran, this percentage was lower.

10. Most linguists believe that "ferengi," a word used widely throughout the Middle East, derives from "Frank," and that its use can be traced back to the Crusades, when the "Franks" would have been largely synonymous with "Westerners" to the indigenous population.

Iran's legitimate government and return the Shah to power. The Iranians are a proud people with a long memory. The role of the United States in propping up the Shah's repressive regime, in 1953 and in the years leading up to the Islamic Revolution, is still fresh in the minds of many Iranians, as is the now-ironic support given to Saddam Hussein during the Iran-Iraq War. These old wounds, coupled with recent 'saber-rattling' from Washington, have created a climate of mistrust, which benefits neither nation.

Ultimately, however, the sentiment that I heard most was that "We have nothing against the American people, only their government." The Iranian government has on occasion publicly recognized this distinction between the American people and a government not acting in the best interests of its citizens. One dramatic example of this recognition occurred when Iran's former secular leader, President Rafsanjani, commented on the 1993 massacre of 74 men, women, and children in Waco, Texas, by stating, "If they do that to their own citizens, just think of what they would do to us."

Zionists: Remove Them

Already convinced that the American media were purposely distorting news about their country and the Islamic Revolution for their own nefarious purposes, Iranians were not surprised to learn that media manipulation and Jewish control of the media go hand-in-hand in North America. They were, however, somewhat taken aback by the scope of this control and the extent to which it is entrenched.

Iranians might be ignorant of the subtleties of media control, and the importance of the media within a Western democracy, but their ignorance is trivial compared to the widespread ignorance of Zionism found in North America. There is nothing abstract or distant about Zionism in the Middle East. I found Iranians more understanding of the subtleties of repression in the West than most Americans, which is to be expected given their exposure to overt Zionism in the region.

While exploring through the old sector of Yazd, a desert city famous for its surviving Zoroastrian community and religious sites, a man drove past me on an ancient moped.[11] He glanced at my unfamiliar Western garb as I glanced at the equally unfamiliar clerical clothing of a Mullah that he was wearing. As the bike came to an abrupt stop a moment later, I heard the now familiar, "Where are you from?" After exchanging pleasantries, the conversation turned to why I had chosen to visit Iran, rather than tourist-friendly Turkey or the sun-drenched beaches of Goa. I explained to him that I was an opponent of U.S. foreign policy, and that I had wished to experience the real Iran, not the villainized Iran presented to North Americans on their television screens. "Do you think that the Jews will drag the Middle East into yet another war?" I asked. "I have nothing against the Jews as a people," he replied. "With a few exceptions, Jews and Muslims have coexisted peacefully with each other for centuries in Iran.[12] However, peace will not arrive in the Middle East until all the Zionists are removed from power, be they in Tel Aviv or Washington."

Lessons Learned

Some may question the wisdom of visiting Iran, or any non-White nation, in search of a better understanding of the world and our race's place within it. In doing so, they might stress that the solutions to the problems facing our people must come from within, and that ultimately our own self-interest must supersede any sympathy that we may have for other oppressed peoples. While I would strongly agree with my hypothetical detractors on both of those points, I would just as strongly defend my position that a contradiction need not exist between learning from other people's struggles and remaining true to your own people. Romania's finest son, Corneliu Codreanu, perhaps expressed this sentiment best when he stated "There is, among all those in various parts of the world who serve their people, a kinship of sympathy, as there is such a kinship among those who labor for the destruction of peoples."

The most important lesson that I learned during my stay in Iran was that the reality of that nation was worlds apart from the image presented to North Americans by the controlled media: Iran was overwhelmingly foreign, but it was in no way "evil."

Coming face-to-face with this shameless lie told by the controlled media — a lie that may soon be used to justify another slaughter of non-Jews on behalf of Israel — has strengthened my determination to help break the Jewish stranglehold on the media, so that once again our people can look at themselves, and at the world around them, through unfiltered eyes.

11. Zoroastrianism, which was the dominant religion of the Persian Empire before the arrival of Islam in the seventh century A.D., is one of the world's oldest monotheistic religions. At Yazd's fire temple, one of Zoroastrianism's holiest sites, there is a painting of its founder Zarathustra, whose white skin, flowing brown beard and blue eyes were explained to me by an elderly volunteer at the temple: "You see," he said, pointing towards the painting, "Zarathustra was the only Aryan prophet of God."

12. One of these "exceptions" involved the arrest of thirteen Iranian Jews on charges of spying for Israel in 1999. The Iranian judiciary ignored the predictably shrill demands from organized Jewry that the defendants be released without trial, and convicted ten of the thirteen defendants in 2000 to sentences ranging from four to thirteen years.

U.N. Worthless

If the U.N. doesn't demand to be the only party re-instituting an Iraqi government, and disallow an American or British veto (since they are the belligerents), then the institution is worthless in today's world. I'd bet the C.I.A. has filled a few of those captured Iraqi missiles with Israeli-manufactured nerve agents and planted drums of chemical "weapons of mass destruction" in Iraq to justify this otherwise criminal war. If the Iraqis had had the means they would have been used.

Judeo-Enlightenment

It is indeed amazing that Jews have successfully persuaded most Americans that their ethnic interests are our national interests.

I used to wonder why it was that Jews love to argue so much; it now seems to me that the reason for this is that it is much more difficult to convince people of lies than of the truth. Convincing people that lies are in fact the truth requires a great deal of organized and concentrated effort precisely because lies are generally counterintuitive and therefore encounter fierce resistance among most people. (This could also in part explain why Jews are considered so 'pushy.')

Many philosophers traditionally held that truth should have a certain quality of self-evidence. Nothing that Jewish interests have tried (and succeeded) to force Americans to believe has ever been self-evident — rather, it has been lies, lies, and more lies: all races are equal; poverty is the result of oppression; massive Third World immigration is good for the Western world; Israel has always been a good friend of the U.S.; 9-11 happened because Muslims resent our 'freedoms'; and on and on. . . "enlightening" the benighted Americans with an endless stream of untruths.

Perhaps "Judeo-Enlightenment" would be an appropriate (and somewhat ironic) designation for this phenomenon.

Killing the Midwest

The "Otto Bremer Foundation" is a nest of vipers misusing the money of a German immigrant tycoon for Jewish purposes. They are involved in bringing in Sudan boys to Fargo, North Dakota and other mischief. Their money is behind the Lutherans bringing in the Negroes. Here is what they are doing on the formerly pristine plains of the Midwest, taken from their own article, "Otto Bremer Foundation Creates Opportunities for Social, Economic Justice":

"The Amherst H. Wilder Foundation, St. Paul, received... $150,000 — to support its New American Collaborative, which works to improve the capacity of organizations serving immigrant and refugee communities... Otto Bremer awarded its only foundation initiative grant during this round of funding to the Jewish Community Relations Council of Minnesota, Minneapolis. The $150,000 grant will support Tolerance Minnesota, a program that will enable educators to teach tolerance and anti-bias lessons.... In addition, the foundation awarded 53 grants totaling $1,672,359 to other trust purposes, including major funding to the following Minnesota nonprofits: Anishinaabe Center, Detroit Lakes, $120,000 for operations of this organization, which works to restore the independence and quality of life of the Anishinaabe. Chicanos Latinos Unidos en Servicio (CLUES), St. Paul, $120,000 for general operations of this social service agency.... Somalian Women's Association, Minneapolis, $75,000 to purchase a facility for a women's shelter.... New Americans Community Services (NACS) $19,700 St. Paul, MN; For long-term strategic planning of this organization that provides services to recent African refugees.... Lutheran Social Service of Minnesota $90,000 Minneapolis, MN; To provide services for refugees in Pelican Rapids, Rothsay, Moorhead, and Fergus Falls...."

If you have ever visited these neat, clean, decent towns of unsuspecting White Americans, you would realize what a filthy crime is being committed here by the Jews and their superstition-deluded functionaries.

Everything Clear Now

NATIONAL VANGUARD 119 came in the mail yesterday evening, and I just had to write and say it is one of the best publications I have seen; congratulations. I wanted to comment on S. J. Quentin's letter from Des Moines. I worked for the Wackenhut company for several years, as did my wife. I never knew that they were Jewish owned, but that would explain their hostility to me personally. I used a confederate flag as the back seat cover in my convertible — very noticable to anyone. A new employee came to my work site one evening for training. He commented on the flag, and told me of his own racial beliefs. He also noticed and commented favorably on two racially-oriented books I had laying about. I followed along with the conversation, which he initiated. I never saw the man again, but later learned that he had returned to Florida, to company headquarters in Coral Gables. He was an internal investigator for the firm. After that, no pay raises, no promotions, no good contracts for me. So, thanks to Mr. Quentin's letter, the whole situation became perfectly clear.

Exceptions to RPO

Revilo P. Oliver made astonishingly ill-educated comments on the Christian religion in your last issue. He sneered at the Gospel as a "Jewish cult for goyim." Yet he acknowledged that Jews in their Talmud show "hostility to the Jesus of the New Testament." The Talmud does not just show hostility towards Jesus; it screeches with hatred for Him. I quote from its pages: "Jesus fornicated with his jackass." "Jesus is in hell just now being punished for his sins by being boiled in hot semen." "Christians are boiled in excrement."

How, then, can it be asserted that the Christian religion is a Jewish cult for goyim? The Talmud totally rejects the New Testament teaching.

As for Professor Oliver's claim that the Gospels teach Mary remained a virgin after the birth of her firstborn son, this is just not correct. Look at Mark's Gospel, Chapter 6. There we are told that Jesus had four brothers, and at least two sisters; this is also repeated in other Gospels.

In my opinion, Professor Oliver's objections to the Christian religion were based upon reading books about it, rather than the New Testament teaching upon it. In his writings he shows as much hostility towards the religion of Christ as the Jews, the Communists, and the Muslims. As a right-wing Christian I know from personal experience that this hatred the Jews feel for us still exists to this day. They slaughtered some 66 million confessing Christians in the Soviet Union, says the statistician Kurganov (see Solzhenitsyn's Gulag Archipelago, vol. 2). We hear plenty about the six million, but rarely hear about the 66 million. Does this show the Jews have lots of power in the mass media?

Harry Mullin (ex-British Army)
Glasgow

Professor Oliver noted only that the "Gospel of James and other Christian gospels" (and there are many which did not make it into the 'New Testament') made the claim for the continued virginity of Mary. Perhaps that point should have been clarified with a note that he did not mean all of the other gospels. He obviously did not refer to the so-called canonical gospels.

As for the Jewish hatred of us, including hatred of White Christians, on that we can all agree. But the crucial point, I think, is in defining who we are. We are a race, a biological family, and our survival is threatened. Our racial loyalty should trump all other loyalties, including the religious. — K. A. S.

Christians and Race

It's true that most of Chistianity believes in racial equality and racial mixing. These days, they also virtually worship the Jews. There is Identity Christianity today, which tries to harmonize the religion with our survival needs, but this is a tiny fraction of the whole. So the bottom line is that Christians in general are our enemies when it comes to race. But it doesn't have to be that way. Christians did admit they were wrong about the Sun and the Earth. Many admit they were wrong about evolution. So they could, theoretically, admit they are wrong about race.

MLK and Rustin

Have you seen the January 20, 2003 copy of Time magazine? It contains an article on page 41 by Andrew Sullivan entitled "Invisible Man."

Mr. Sullivan would have us believe that Bayard Rustin was a great American. The article mentions many of the things that your excellent leaflet on King, The Beast As Saint, points out, such as Rustin being a homosexual and a "former" member of the Communist Party. Sullivan also notes Rustin's stint in jail during WW II. The article also contains a photo of Rustin with King, and ends with this 'moral': "a man... dreaming of a future in which the work of integration, black and white, gay and straight, is the moral — and joyful — duty of all of us." Sickness is now mainstream.

Theodore T. Acre
Newport News, Virginia

It is interesting that the Jews are now acknowledging exactly what "evil racists" were saying about Rustin all along — except that they now feel the climate is right to trumpet Rustin as a 'hero' for precisely the reasons for which decent Americans would have condemned him, had they been properly informed. It is also interesting that the Jews have now chosen for their mouthpiece Andrew Sullivan, the homosexual who is being groomed as a "modern conservative" spokesman. — K. A. S.

Cheated of Greatness

I saw man take his first steps on the Moon. I saw the vast multitude of technological developments, developed by White men in a White society, which have benefitted everyone alive today. In the history of the human race, there has never been a program, of any kind, which paid more long-lasting dividends to all of humanity than the space program. The computer, mylar, teflon, kevlar, the microwave, freeze dried foods: all of these were developed by White men in a White society for the space program.

The rockets which took men to the Moon — a uniquely American accomplishment — were designed and built by Dr. Werner von Braun and his "Peenemunde" team. I watched the space program from its very beginning. I remember Sputnik I, a dog named Laika, and chimps named Ham and Able. I remember Yuri Gagarin and Alan Shepherd. I remember John Glenn and all of the Mercury 7. I saw our society — a White American society — win the "Space Race."

I was one of the generation which grew up believing that by the year 2000, we would have colonies on the Moon, and expeditions to Mars and possibly farther. I am one of the generation that has seen the money for such things squandered on "social programs" which create nothing, return nothing, and benefit nothing except the destruction of the society which was, once, great enough to literally touch the surface of another world. I was cheated. We all were. For years I held to the dream. I still vainly cling to it. One day, maybe not in my lifetime, I hope in my children's lifetime, America will wake up. I also hold onto the dream that America will see what has happened, what is being done, and return to the greatness that once existed. Am I alone? Am I a solitary dreamer? Is my dream nothing more than a delusion based on false hope? Perhaps.

You see, I am a native Texan, and I was a frequent visitor to the Johnson Space Center in the days when there was something to visit. I knew Dr. von Braun. I knew Dr. Oberth. They were great men. They were men who had time to spend in talking with a teenager who had the gall to go up to them and ask questions. They were men with a vision of the future. Where is that vision, now? They are gone. Who has taken their place? Did their vision die with them? How can one expect a Space Agency which places more emphasis on "diversity," "multiculturalism," and "Political Correctness" than on hard science to match the accomplishments of the past? How can one expect the Sambos, Zambos, Mulattos, Jews and Mestizos who have replaced the White scientists to match their deeds?

This is insanity of the first order. We have failed. We have failed ourselves and our children. We have failed our grandchildren. Can we turn it around?

No Sam Adams Beer

Many NATIONAL VANGUARD readers may have seen the Sam Adams Lite Beer commercial that features an attractive White woman and a Black male who 'hook up' at a party, go behind closed doors and make obscene sex noises together to the entertainment of the crowd outside. It turns out the interracial couple is just playing with the beer bottle, enjoying the forbidden pleasure of interracial drinking. I want to puke. This advertisement is even more tasteless than Sam Adams Lite Beer. Please send an

Awakened Sleeper

I just want to say that I enjoy your site very much and will be joining your organization very soon. I have purchased stickers and leaflets from you, and when I received your book catalog I could not believe how much "hidden" history is out there. There are so many books that I want to read, and so much to learn, that I feel like I have just awakened from a time warp and missed about 50 to100 years of history! I get into sometimes heated discussions with friends and co-workers about race, and it's amazing how brainwashed our people are. The opinions they hold are not their own, drawn from facts, logic, and their personal observations — but vague media-induced "feelings." The best of them see the light quickly, though. Bless you and keep up the good work!

Zionist Meat Grinder

I am slowly beginning to equate the American flag with the sickening Israeli/Zionist flag. Where are the "weapons of mass destruction" in Iraq? The U.S. troops have been in Iraq for many weeks and they haven't found much except fertilizer and hapless bombed-out Iraqis (soon to be "benefiting" from Jewish megabucks media and "democracy").

Will Americans ever see the light and begin to see what this endless Middle East war is really about? I registered for Selective Service on my 18th birthday. I will be 40 years old this June and I am not quite sure if I would be caught up in this Selective Service/Draft dragnet when they begin to run out of warm bodies to toss into the Zionist "meat grinder." God forbid the reinstatement of the draft/military conscription system! I am a man of little means, but would have to make the difficult choice of leaving militarized/terrorist/Zionist-besieged America and moving to some other country.

Candid Jews

I sometimes amuse myself by toying with the minds of the Jews who post letters on the Jerusalem Post Web site. This is my latest. The responses are chilling wonderment.

My Dear Palestinian Friends:

You must understand, you are nobody, and we are a people destined for greatness. We are to be the rulers of the world. We must have a land base from which to rule. You should get out now while you can do so safely. When the expulsion starts, during the fog of war, there will be tank fire and there will be artillery raining death and destruction. Bombs will be falling. The bulldozers will be busy. We are even now goading the Americans, our dogs of war, into taking out your hero, Saddam. We shall gain control over the hundred billion barrels of oil in Iraq, and then we and our American war dogs will be completely independent of your oil leash. We will break Iraq into three feuding factions which will leave us in overall control. Long live Zion! Goyim are our cattle.

Regards, Norm

This is one of the responses:

Norm, I wish you wouldn't broadcast this message to all the goyim. We have enough trouble now. Please keep this among our own people. You are right of course: God (the Hebrew God , the One who created the universe) chose us and everyone sees how his will is unfolding. But please don't rub it in. The pathetic goyim, especially the Arabs and their false God, are flinging themselves about looking for some meaning to their miserable existence. But God has so created the World that the Jew should rule it all. I'm so glad that you see it so clearly, but please keep it to yourself.

Another response:

Your American war dogs? Norm, I love the state of Israel and stand for all the Jews, but language like that is not necessary. If it wasn't for your "war dogs" the state of Israel would not exist today. I'm sure you meant something else, like our "greatest friends"; you see, I am an American.

Space Travel

Someday deep space travel will be necessary for our survival. Will our race still be around, and able to provide the know-how and courage for that great step? We do know that many millennia hence our Sun will use up its hydrogen supply, expand, and then contract, leaving our Earth a lifeless cinder. I have concluded that deep space travel will, of necessity, have to be in a spherical object probably many miles in diameter with an anti-magnetic outer shell of immensely durable metal alloys, then a liquid layer for float and stabilization of the inner magnetic core, which in turn would have layered zones containing farms, cities, schools, and homes — with artificial sunrises and sunsets, forests and lakes, clouds, and artificial seasons to imitate Earth's. The space pioneers will have to live within the object for many years, with everything recycled until they reach a solar system with a planet similar to Earth, where they will then disembark and start anew, with all past knowledge of the race encompassed within their brains and archives, to be passed on to future generations who will one day repeat the process.

That's my vision of the distant future — provided the silly bastards don't blow themselves to smithereens or revert to a primitive stage, and live as the savages and great apes live today. If we don't destroy one another, or degenerate, we can hope for eternal survival on new worlds. The Atom will be man's Eve on our beautiful planet Earth unless a 'Noah's Ark' space ship takes our progeny, and our racial soul, to another world.

Case Against Violence

The last thing White people want to condone at this time is violence. Some of our bruders tried direct action in the early 1980s and today they are all either dead or in prison. In PSA (Police State America) a minor infraction, a prank, even just a feeling can result in years of incarceration, so anything even slightly illegal should be avoided. Although White people are under attack and our numbers are dwindling worldwide we must continue to turn the other cheek to the daily affronts. However, after turning the other cheek enough times you start to feel like one of those 3-D cards that are moved back and forth to make the head appear to move. Regardless, like 'Summer of Love' hippies, nothing should move us to violence. No matter that White women are raped by Black men every day. Never mind that our government is at war with us. Although passage of the "USA Patriot Act" means government agencies can tap your phone, surveil your personal computer, and search your home or workplace without you being informed, it does not mean they will. They probably won't. Movies, television, and the real world are filled with violence but please let's not let any White people use it. Some kind of Gandhian passive resistance is our best bet.

Some misguided, misanthropic White people think society-level chaos would be better than impotently watching as the White race slowly deliquesces away. It is usually the young and impetuous who think anarchy would be better than doing nothing as Jew poison creeps soul by soul though White culture.

It's best to avoid these rakehells who advocate violence as an alternative to night-sailing blindly into Jew-controlled waters. The Turner Diaries and Hunter are, after all, just action-adventure novels, entertainment. So as our numbers diminish and all control and power slips from our fingers we should just be nice, join hands, and wait to be told to bend over.

Zyd Awareness

I picked up my gal's dad at the airport yesterday. He's from an area near New York's Brighton Beach. Seeking to be amenable, I inquired about his environment. According to dad, the Rosyjskie Zyds have dislodged just about all Afro-Ams from their regional surroundings. Not wishing to hear a diatribe about race, I probed into the economics of his neighborhood.

According to dad, the recently arrived Russian Zyds are buying houses for 200-300 grand and replacing them with structures worth millions. Dad says it's all possible because of the cooperation between the U.S.S.A. native-born Jews and Soviet-born Zyds. He finds their collaboration to be amazing. Dad's a native New Yorker (84 years old) — he's lived near Brighton Beach for decades — and, according to him, there's "no crime amongst the chosen" and they "support their groups much better than any Italian-American community in the annals of the Big Apple."

The major New York Jewish Russian-language newspaper is massive. Often it's bigger, in both pages and advertising, than the New York Times. It has more readers than any other Russian-language publication outside of the former Soviet Union.

Dad is not anti-this or anti-that. He's too old to be involved in anything other than family, health, and other imminent matters. He ambulates okay and his intellect shows no signs of deterioration. Ancestors of his family generally reached the 95-97 mark!

Today I was reading my newspaper and noted a fellow named Shapiro waxing angry over a few Whites in Georgia having their own free association prom. Dad says that the Zyd sense of peoplehood cannot be honestly questioned. He believes that the chosen don't approve of free association for majorities. Perhaps he's just exaggerating due to his lack of travel and absorption of reading materials. What do you think?

Gotta run. Gotta show dad the sights. Have love in your hearts.

Yellow Peril

Note that the Chinese are improving their ecology and advancing the welfare of their people. Dubya is adding more jobs here at MacDonalds. They are controlling their population and are exporting wheat for the first time in centuries. We are importing millions of illegal aliens. The Chinese have turned National Socialism into an exact science and named it Communism. The last I read, there were 50 Jews in all of China. That must be the secret.

At UNLV here in Las Vegas, half of all 100 Internet stations are occupied by Chinese students checking their email in Chinese. None are enrolled in law school but are instead studying biology, engineering, and physics. We opened a brand new law school here, the first in the state. It is full to capacity. We need more lawyers to add to the million already in this country. There are 10,000 lawyers in all of Japan, with half our population. Believe in the real Yellow Peril.

New Allies

Like other White nationalists, I find allies not only among certain forces on the "right," but also anarchists, postmodernists, national liberationists, Third Worldists, and other sectors of the "left." Here are some of the reasons: First, anywhere Whites live with people of color, there will be exploitation, domination, and humiliation of these people of color by the Whites. Put another way, integration = exploitation. Second, the ruling class does not import immigrants of color because they love these people, but merely for the purposes of cheap labor. This is pure exploitation, and also results in a drain on the immigrants' countries of origin. Third, the ruling class pits one race against others in endless struggles for the biggest piece of the multicultural pie. This is to prevent any unified opposition to the status quo from developing. Fourth, the same ruling class that promotes so-called "anti-racism" in America, promotes Zionist hegemony and imperialism in the Middle East. Many on the "left" are starting to realize that this is hardly a coincidence. Fifth, as many leftists are beginning to realize, the only true supremacists of any consequence are Jews. National liberationists of all races are struggling against Zionist chauvinism and imperialism. It is clear: racial separatism/nationalism is the only comprehensive solution to all five of these problems. Thus, forces on both the "left" and "right" are beginning to ally against their common enemy: the supremacist Zionist Establishment.

America's Dead Future

I much admire your moral tone and fearlessness in denouncing the infamies of Israel and the Zionist killers at its helm. However, strictly speaking, your complaint about a "Zionist Occupied Government" in America assumes that the United States (1) is a nation and (2) has or even perhaps once had an effective government. Neither of these assumptions can withstand strict examination. In the first place, endowed with rich resources and comparatively scant population, the country has never needed a true "government" and obviously functions relatively well without one.

The truth is that the "nation" in question is an atomistic collection of individuals descended from outcasts of genuine nations, according to its founding principles. The U.S. "government" is so powerless (though it has powerful munitions for use against genuine nations) that it is capable neither of controlling itself nor its reckless course in history. The U.S. "State Department" has ever been incompetent, cowardly, unprincipled. U.S. "law enforcement" agencies (except for the police baton and the "Thin Blue Line" that protects us, God bless them) are a sham and a confusion. Laws in general here are enforced little and rarely fully complied with.

Given the foregoing actualities, the so-called "country" is undefended and indefensible, morally and physically, protected mainly by the surrounding oceans. It is and always has been open to manipulations, deceptions, and delusions of all kinds, especially lately the treasonable plots of the most assertive anti-Nation, whose heinous and disgusting crimes you dutifully chronicle. This is the only sense in which "Zionist Occupied Government" is accurate. The American "national idea" rises no higher than militant laissez-faire in domestic and external affairs. This French term is illustrative of the root of the problem, which is that America, despite its grandiloquent pretensions, stands for nothing positive; is in fact a non-entity in essence; asserts its power always on behalf of domestic or foreign forces and ideas alien to itself; and above all, has no future except in death — in these days it is the assigned vehicle of death, and is proceeding to destroy all ideas lacking the power of self-defense (literally defense of self or soul, the heart of a nation when it exists). In short, America is and contains nothing but a culture of death (literally killing one in five babies in the womb every day). It will never rise even to the level of the nations whose ejected members caused its founding. It will now reduce them, however, to its level. This is the fearsome reality. Note well, therefore, the frightful denouement.

The United States of America, the headless and heedless essence of self-will, possessing 25,000 nuclear weapons and now feverishly constructing more and more, will perform the "task" of teaching the World what freedom is not.

It is well to state the problem simply. Zionist domination of the World, to the extent it exists, proceeds through the failure of true nations to monopolize the lending of money at interest. True nations have thereby been weakened, attacked, injured, and nearly completely destroyed.

Whether the financiers are Jews, Deists, Methodists, or Catholics is a question of degree of evil, interesting but not essential. It can, however, distract true nations and genuine peoples from the essence of their daunting task in the modern World — the task of Freedom — which for each of them is nothing but self-control writ large. We consider that money — Jewish money included — is nothing but crystallized human labor. Human labor is nothing but the God-given power of vital activity, not to be abused or privately alienated on pain of God-ordained Death, as we see.

Those who can run to the library can read and name the true Nation that possesses the cultural, religious, philosophical, and genuinely national heritage — the historical destiny, if you like — to lead us toward the above-described true consciousness of Freedom. By assisting its Folk, they dignify and liberate themselves. May they see the light — this necessary hierarchy of Nations — by the grace of God.

Webster Responds

Thank you for drawing my attention to a letter NATIONAL VANGUARD has received from a "Russell James of Glasgow, Scotland" which states that you should not have relied upon me as a source for your reporting of the Regina -v- Hancock racial incitement case because I am a "notorious British homosexual."

The words "British" and "homosexual" are undoubtedly correct. As for "notorious," I am content to allow those who know my record of service to the cause of British nationalism since I was a 17-year-old (I am 60 this May) to be the judge of that.

As Tony Hancock, the Defendant in this case (a devout heterosexual whose family has known me since he was 14 and I was 19) was happy to employ me, (a) to act as his Court-recognised 'McKenzie Friend' during pre-trial hearings; (b) to draft a series of pre-trial Applications, one of which persuaded the Court to award him a grant of Legal Aid, even though he is not impecunious, enabling him to instruct a Solicitor and a Barrister without needing to outlay thousands of pounds; (c) to produce a polemic in my 'Electronic Watch on Zion' e-bulletin about the prosecution in advance of the trial — and then to report the victorious outcome; and if Tony's Barrister, Adrian Davies, saw fit to issue a note of thanks to me after the trial for the research assistance I was able to render, then I fail to see why this "Russell James" should feel qualified to reprimand you for relying on my information.

Were my facts and analyses right or wrong? Would your readers and the Cause have been better served by being kept in ignorance of correct information because it came from a homosexual? This is the inane 'logic' of The 'Holy' Inquisition. It's a wonder such people don't scrape down the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel on account of Michaelangelo's homosexual proclivities which he never troubled to hide, even from Pope Gregory, his main patron.

As you allowed my detractor "Russell James" to dilate on various other persons' service records, I will ask you to allow me to advance a few facts about myself for those who do not know me: I left the Young Conservatives in 1960 as a 17-year-old to join A. K. Chesterton's League of Empire Loyalists. I was expelled by Chesterton from the LEL in 1962 when newspapers published photographs of me helping Colin Jordan's National Socialist Movement fight off a mainly Jewish mob which was attempting to storm its "Free Britain from Jewish Control" rally in Trafalgar Square. I joined the National Front in 1969 and was elected its National Activities Organiser in 1970. I brought the party out of obscurity and into the headlines by anti-immigration marches, such as the Red Lion Square march in 1974. In 1973 I was adopted at the last minute as the NF candidate in a Parliamentary by-election for West Bromwich, and, after a three week campaign, won 16.02 per cent of the poll. I staged a "One Man March" in Manchester in 1977 (after a march I had organised for the NF had been banned) which attracted world-wide publicity. I funded the first three issues of Spearhead magazine in 1963/4 and was for many years its Assistant Editor. From 1974 until 1983 I was Editor of National Front News and was prosecuted and convicted on two counts of "Incitement to Racial Hatred" in 1978 and given two concurrent six month jail terms, suspended for two years and fined. I wrote 'Let London Live,' the election leaflet issued by the NF's 92 candidates in the 1977 Greater London Council elections. The leaflet was later described by Labour Weekly: "the most dynamic, exciting and hard-hitting leaflet of the campaign." The NF candidates attracted a total of 119,000 votes. In 1978 I edited and published 'Lifting The Lid Off the Anti Nazi League' and was sued for libel by Peter Hain, then co-leader of ANAL (an acronym I invented for it) who is now a member of the Labour Government. Due to the cost of libel actions I had to defend myself in the High Court against Hain's team of Jewish barristers, led by a QC. After a five-day trial the jury awarded Hain derisory damages of £5 (paid by an ex-serviceman in the public gallery) and the Judge awarded a Costs order to Hain so hedged by restrictions that he was unable to secure one penny of his £15,000+ legal bill. In 1980 I co-wrote, edited and published the broadsheet 'Holocaust News' which is still kept in print by another publisher and which has been circulated by the score-thousand world-wide. After being ousted from the NF in 1983, my services as a typesetter, graphic designer and writer were eventually retained by Lady Jane Birdwood, editor of Choice, from 1992 onwards until she died. For the moment my output is conveyed by the Internet in two occasional bulletins: the 'Electronic Loose Cannon' and the 'Electronic Watch on Zion.'

Sheppard Responds

NATIONAL VANGUARD readers were given a rare glimpse inside British nationalist politics with an item in issue 119 from Russell James of Scotland. Since the letter was highly critical of me, and contains some serious inaccuracies, I would be grateful of the opportunity to reply.

Martin Webster was a tireless and dynamic organizer for the National Front in the 1970s and should be given his due, particularly for attention-grabbing stunts like his famous "one man march." At that time the NF had enormous public support and was well on the way to having MPs (not just local Councilors) elected. Whether Webster's subsequent "outing" as a homosexual was the main cause of the NF's demise is debatable, but it was certainly a major embarrassment and significant factor in the NF's fall in popularity. Now Webster is one of many enemies Nick Griffin has made on the latter's rise to prominence in British nationalist politics.

The lesson here, in my view, is that whatever Webster's qualities, inevitably his feminine side came to the fore. Had he been capable of suppressing his sexuality for the sake of his country, things might have worked out very differently.

The "very crude racist leaflets" for which I was imprisoned are featured on the heretical.co.uk website so NV readers can judge for themselves. It is true that the leaflet was unapproved — my intention was that the BNP leadership could "plausibly deny" them if things went wrong — and intended as a gimmick to start a new branch of the BNP. Contrary to James' allegation, my younger colleague was explicitly told that the strategy carried some risk and given the opportunity to withdraw. My opinion was that we would escape prosecution because it was actually an election leaflet. When it came to trial however, he conveniently "forgot" about this and attempted to shift all the blame onto me. People so often show their true mettle when their backs are against the wall.

It is interesting that James brings up Wingfield and the official BNP publication, Voice of Freedom, because this is the source of the latest BNP fiasco. In an attempt to demonstrate that the Party are not "nasty racists" the February issue pictures a BNP member with his arm around his Zimbabwean son-in-law, saying he "loves dearly" his mixed-race grandchildren. The BNP is also currently circulating leaflets accusing the National Front of being "a bunch of boot boy thugs."At the grass-roots level many members of the various nationalist groups struggle to ignore their minor differences in policy and the dogmatic pronouncements of their leaders to hold unofficial meetings and activities together. The recent actions of "Griffin's BNP" however are steps too far for many nationalists and the prospect is now very real of rival nationalist parties standing for election in the same areas, splitting the vote and practically guaranteeing failure for both.

The life-blood of any movement or political party is its activists. Griffin's attempts to broaden the BNP's appeal, whether successful or not, threaten to lose it its most dedicated workers, jeopardizing its future.

Jordan on James

Russell James of the British National Party complains in your issue No. 119 that your magazine's previous report of the court victory of my co-defendant Anthony Hancock, prosecuted for printing literature for me, including my book Merrie England 2000, perpetrated inequality of recognition in failing to mention as a victim of suppression of free speech his leader Nick Griffin, who some years ago was fined and given a suspended sentence under the same law against so-called 'racial hatred.'

However, Mr. James' complaint could be seen as disqualified by being remarkably and one-sidedly partisan. While I have most strongly disagreed with Mr. Griffin's policy of compromise for the sake of electioneering, I have no less strongly voiced condemnation in print when he was put on trial in the case in question. This I have always done and would always do respecting victims of anti-Aryan suppression, whatever the country or political creed or organisation. My attitude and record in this respect has thus never been one-sided and partisan.

In contrast, Mr. Griffin's BNP has never reported at all, let alone deplored the recent prosecution against Mr. Hancock and myself, which seemingly thereby has not bothered them at all.

I conclude on the more pleasant note of remarking that the tragedy of Dr. Pierce's death has indeed been a great testing time for your organisation's ability to survive and thereby maintain the quality of his work, and accordingly I am delighted to observe how well the National Alliance is continuing in his footsteps. I tender my best wishes for your continued success.

News from the Homelands

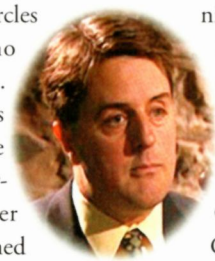
by Mark Cotterill

Great Britain

THE BRITISH nationalist movement made its biggest electoral push for many years on May 1st. They ran around 240 candidates nationwide, the largest nationalist slate for Local Council elections since 1978. By far the biggest slate was from the British National Party (BNP), which gained an impressive 13 new council seats, bringing its total to 17. The Freedom Party (FP) also gained a seat as did the Third Way (TW), making a grand total of 19 nationalist councillors now.

A row has arisen in the BNP over those in the party who have Black family members. Charlie Bickerstaffe, the BNP candidate for the Barrow area, turned out to have an African son-in-law and two mixed breed grandchildren — of whom he said he was proud. Another candidate, Ivan Duxbury, who is running in the Ribble Valley area, was until recently married to a Negress, whom he brought back from Africa to live in his hometown of Clithero. He had a mixed breed child with her, who also now lives in England. Many BNP activists are not happy with this and have threatened to leave the party if action is not taken to dismiss members with multiracial families.

Jason Spence, an activist with the National Front (NF) was gunned down by drug pushers in Birmingham, because he had dared to take a stand against the sale of drugs in his community. Jason's wife of seventeen years, Jacqui, was left to bring up their three children. This was the act of cowards who are prepared to kill a community-oriented man just so they can continue to make profits at other people's expense. Jason, who was 31, was well known in nationalist circles as a keen activist who would never give in. The killing happened as he was walking home from a night out in a Birmingham pub. A silver station wagon approached him. Jason went to the window of the car and it was then that he was shot at point blank range — American style, as some say. Following the shooting, dozens of friends and family members paid their respects to Jason at the scene of the murder, and left flowers and a red and white Cross of St. George flag.



Nick Griffin of the BNP: amid electoral success, internal controversy over race

Germany

THE TRIAL OF Horst Mahler, the lawyer for the National Democratic Party (NPD) was adjourned until later this year so more witnesses for the German Government could be found. All that Mahler was claimed to have said was "It was an action that, as cruel as it was, was justified," referring to the Islamic attacks on America on 9-11.

The NPD protested the state visit of Israeli President Moshe Katzav to Berlin. Despite sub-zero temperatures the NPD demonstration attracted a good crowd, vastly outnumbering the "anti-fascists" who also turned out to demonstrate. Joschka Fischer, Germany's Foreign Minister, branded the NPD rally "a disgrace" and apologized to Katzav that the Berlin police had permitted it to go ahead.

A Jewish leader attacked the Berlin police late last year for "looking the other way" when the chairman of the city's Jewish community was "insulted" at the official renaming of a street. "What happened is a sad reminder of the late 1920s," said Paul Spiegel, head of Germany's Central Council of Jews. Alexander Brenner was roundly criticized at the ceremony in Berlin's Spandau district where a street was being renamed Judenstrasse — "Jew Street." A group of about 50 people in the crowd interrupted Brenner's speech shouting "Jews out" and "You, the Jews, it's all your fault." Police officers present apparently saw no reason to intervene. Spiegel called on the Berlin Interior Ministry to investigate the incident. The street was originally called Jew Street until the German government of the time changed its name to the much nicer Kinkel Street in 1938.

The Federal Constitutional Court has decided to reject a joint state-federal application for a ban on the NPD, according to a report aired on the German public television network ARD. ARD, citing two unidentified sources close to the case, said the court would rule that the application had been hopelessly compromised by revelations that at least nine NPD members, some of them leading figures in the party, were simultaneously working as paid agents and informers for the federal government's domestic intelligence agency. A court spokesman called the report "pure speculation," and said further hearings could not be ruled out. Rejection of the application would be a serious embarrassment for the federal cabinet, the federal parliament, and the states, which filed separate applications in early 2001 that were then combined into one request to the court. Likely to get most of the blame, though, would be German Interior Minister Otto Schily, who rallied support for the applications from reluctant colleagues but then allowed his subordinates to wait almost a year after the documents were filed to inform the court that a number of key government witnesses were in fact informants. When that information was finally revealed in January 2002, the court suspended hearings, leading the Bavarian interior minister, Günther Beckstein, to castigate Schily for a series of catastrophic mistakes. The case has essentially been on ice since then, though Schily has continued to insist that the NPD poses a "threat" to Germany's "democratic constitution" and should be banned. But some lawyers now believe the court would not be able to give the party a fair hearing, since it would be impossible to distinguish between actions and pronouncements prompted by ordinary NPD members and those incited by agents on the public payroll. Government officials said that it was "premature" to comment on the ARD report.

Carl Hagen: His Progress Party would cut off aid to mosques and synagogues in Norway.

Sweden

ON DECEMBER 7th the Swedish nationalist movement held its largest demonstration for many years, when almost 2,000 nationalists marched through Stockholm in memory of Daniel Wrestrom, a young Swedish skinhead who was brutally beaten to death by an immigrant gang. The National Democrats (ND), Sweden's leading nationalist political party, was instrumental in organizing the march. Under 1,000 "anti-fascists" showed up to oppose the march, fewer than expected. Four hundred riot police were on duty, and, although a few minor clashes were reported, the march went ahead without any serious incidents.

In last September's general election the ND polled over 4,000 votes in the parliamentary ballot and over 7,000 in the local council elections. About 2,000 of these were in the Stockholm county districts of Sodertalje and Haninge, gaining the ND four seats, but although they polled another 1,000 votes in nearby Norrralje it was not quite enough to win a seat there. The not-so-radical Sweden Democrats (SD), which is also a nationalist party of sorts, polled 76,000 votes (1.4% of the nationwide vote). They won over 50 seats on local councils.

Islam is moving into Northern Ireland, and both the British government and Sinn Fein seem to approve. This leaflet published by the White Nationalist Party was condemned by Sinn Fein councilor John O'Dowd.

Norway

THE POPULIST, anti-immigration Progress Party led by Carl Hagen has made a number of gains in both national and local elections. Opinion polls put the party at over 30% now. One controversial proposal by the party is to withdraw funding for religious congregations that separate men and women at services or in their practices. The proposal would spell an end to state support for Jewish and Muslim congregations.

Ireland

IN 1990, the Irish Supreme Court ruled that any child born to immigrants in Ireland had the right to "care, company and parentage." This meant illegal Third Worlders who had babies in Ireland could not be deported, and pregnant illegals were soon pouring in, many from Africa. In 2002, the government granted residency to 4,000 such mothers, who were often joined by relatives. More than 10,000 similar families are waiting for the paperwork to go through. On January 23rd this year, in an unusual act of sanity, the court reversed itself, ruling 5-2 that the birth of a child "doesn't fundamentally transform the rights of the parent," who can now be deported along with the child. Deputy Prime Minister Mary Harney says this "will prevent others from coming to Ireland to abuse our asylum process on the basis that they are pregnant." The ruling means that the 10,000-plus families could be deported, and the usual people are howling: "It would be quite wrong if today's decision of the Supreme Court were to be used by the government as an excuse to initiate any campaign of mass deportations," said Joe Costello of the Irish Labour Party.

Islam is now spreading north of the border into Ulster where the now-sizable Muslim community intends to open more mosques. However in Portadown, County Antrim, their plans are being opposed by the White Nationalist Party (WNP), who say in their leaflets, "we are opposed to mass immigration into our homelands, the integration of races and the multi-racial society." WNP spokesman Gary Allen told the local media, "We in the WNP do not see the mosque as being a religious center. As far as we're concerned, it's an occupation center for the continued Asian invasion of our country. That's why we are opposed to it." The WNP's leaflet, entitled 'This is Ulster, not Islamabad,' has upset not only the Muslims and liberals, but local Sinn Fein/IRA councilor John O'Dowd, who described the WNP's campaign against the mosque as "a disgraceful intensification of sectarian and racial abuse..." Unionist party supporter Tom Crowe commented, "How things have changed: Forty years ago Sinn Fein/IRA supported 'Ireland for the Irish,' but now they support mass Third World immigration into Ireland and want to make our country multiracial like England! This is crazy. Keep Ireland White."

party from "the right" – the National Bolshevik Party (NBP), led by imprisoned writer and dual-French citizen Eduard Limonov. The NBP's newspaper, Limonka, was officially closed down in October 2002. However, the party has continued publishing nationalist literature and now has a new publication called General Line. Aware of the strength of the NBP and its growing support, the authorities are going in for the kill. In August last year the Justice Ministry demanded that the Moscow regional court close down the party. But the court rejected such a move, claiming that the evidence presented by the Justice Ministry was lacking in substance.

Flanders

THE FLEMISH Nationalist Party, the Vlaams Blok (VB), now has the support of Anke Vander Meersch, who was Miss Belgium in the early 1990s. At present the VB has the support of around 15% of voters in the Flemish-speaking Flanders region, and up to 35% in its political stronghold of Antwerp. With the support of Vander Meersch, who told the media, "The Vlaams Blok says what people really think," the party hope to increase their vote to 17% in the federal elections in May. The VB leader Phillip Dewinter said, "To obtain 17% of all Flemish voters is realistic."

Americans interested in the Vlaams Blok and in Euro-nationalist politics in general may be interested in attending the big Flemish Nationalist festival in Diksmuide, which is held at the end of August each year. The festival, which is held over a weekend, attracts racial-nationalists from all over Europe. If you're interested in attending please write to; Heritage and Destiny, P. O. Radio Oasen's Jonni Hansen

Denmark

ON FEBRUARY 21, in Copenhagen, the Danish Culture Minister Brian Mikkelsen called for an end to state subsidies to Europe's only National Socialist radio station, vowing to do his utmost to get the Denmark-based station off the air. Radio Oasen (Radio Oasis), based in Greven, some 12 miles south of Copenhagen, has been on the air since February 1996. Mikkelsen said he had asked a working group to examine whether it would be possible to revoke the radio station's subsidies. "Once the subsidies are revoked, I think we should examine all possibilities to have it totally banned," he added. Radio Oasen said it was not concerned about the government's threats. "This threat, it's a storm in a teacup. We receive subsidies just like all other local radio stations, in line with the law," Jonni Hansen, head of the Danish National Socialist Movement (DNSB) and owner of the station, stated. "As for banning us, the Minister can't do it: He's forgetting that there is freedom of expression in this country, written into the Constitution," Hansen added. A Culture Ministry official in charge of local radio subsidies confirmed that Radio Oasen, like 250 other local radio stations, has received annual subsidies of about 400,000 kroner (53,400 euros, 58,000 dollars) since 1996. He said Danish politicians could not withdraw Radio Oasen's broadcasting license as long as it respects the law, particularly concerning the section on racism. In the seven years since its launch, Radio Oasen has only had its license suspended once. It was shut down for three months in early 2002 by Greve broadcasting authorities for making degrading comments about Blacks, Jews, Marxists and homosexuals and inciting hatred. Radio Oasen broadcasts 61 hours of programming each week to some 250,000 listeners, according to its owner.

France

JEWS IN FRANCE are leaving for Israel in record numbers, according to official figures. Many blame the climate of insecurity, exemplified by two recent attacks on a Paris rabbi and the very high vote for the National Front (FN) party in the presidential election last year, when its candidate Jean-Marie Le Pen came in second and forced a run-off election. Statistics issued by the Jewish Agency show that 2,566 Jews migrated to Israel in 2002, more than double the number in 2001 and the highest figure since 1972.

Switzerland

A ZURICH LAWYER, Werner Stauffacher, has brought criminal charges against Stuart Eizenstat, the Jewish former U.S. Deputy Treasury Secretary, for publishing a book whose cover shows Switzerland's white cross emblem overlaid with a swastika. Stauffacher's case is based on a little-used Swiss law, which protects public flags and other symbols against inappropriate use. The U.S. edition of Eizenstat's book, Imperfect Justice, sparked a row in Switzerland when it appeared with a cover illustration depicting the traditional white-on-red cross obliterated by a swastika formed from gold bars. Subtitled "Looted assets, slave labor and the unfinished business of World War Two," the book touched a raw nerve in a country already reeling from previous and highly successful Jewish extortion attempts.

Italy

IN AN ADDRESS to the Italian parliament last November, Pope John Paul II offered a common sense solution to the problem of Italy's declining population: Make more babies. Italy's birthrate is one of the lowest in the world — 1.3 children per woman, far lower than the 2.1 necessary just for replacement — and its population one of the oldest. Barring a dramatic turnaround in what the Pope calls "the crisis of the birthrate," Italy is said to need a massive influx of migrant workers to support its elderly pensioners. The situation, says the Pope, is "another grave threat that bears upon the future of this country." The Italian government should implement policies that "make the task of having children and bringing them up less burdensome both socially and economically," he said. Let us hope that it is European children who are the beneficiaries of any change in policy.

Anti-immigration sentiment is on the raise in Italy and the radical nationalist party Forza Nuova (FN) is going from strength to strength. The desire for social stability, proper law and order, and a reconstruction of community life appear to be on the upswing and gaining in popularity. The FN is set to poll very well at the next Italian election and is looking for the support of Italian-Americans. You can contact 'Friends of Forza Nuova' at 1360 Clifton Ave., Suite 131, Clifton, NJ 07012.

Croatia

IVICA RACAN'S leftist government has proposed a law making public display of nationalist symbols a serious criminal offense. Under the law, those publicly displaying such symbols could be jailed for three years. The law will target Croatian racial nationalists, who use the symbols of the Ustashe, the organization that ruled Croatia during World War II. It will even forbid the use of the letter "U" when police think that it stands for the Ustashe, who wore the letter on their uniforms. The law will also ban "glorification of the symbols of former fascist states and organizations."

Czech Republic

THE POLITICIZED Czech police force dealt the country's small but active nationalist movement a blow at the end of last year. They raided the homes of dozens of Czech racial nationalists and seized hundreds of videos, CDs, books, and other literature. Nine people were arrested. A police official said, "A vital supply line of nazi material to Germany has been destroyed." The police investigation into the links between Czech and German nationalists began in October 2000, when over a hundred Germans from Saxony and Bavaria crossed the border into the Czech Republic for a Blood and Honor concert.

SITUATION TERMINAL, BUT NOT SERIOUS by Bob Whitaker

Can You Hate Your Race and Love Your Country?

LIKE SO MANY OTHER fanatical integrationists, Bill O'Reilly demands that "the races" be mixed in the name of "Americanism."

First of all, this has nothing to do with "the races." Nobody cares whether Chinese and Black people intermingle. No one demands that Japan or Taiwan let in Third World immigrants. No one demands that Africa let some other Third Worlders have some of its empty lands. When integrationists say "the races," they mean the White race. When they say "getting rid of racism" it is code for getting rid of Whites. Respectable conservatives want only White-majority countries to bring in the Third World, and they demand that every White-majority country bring in the Third World.

But O'Reilly and the conservative integrationists wring their hands when their children go to college and learn to hate America. What exactly did they expect? The highest morality they taught their children is to fight for the extinction of their own kind. So naturally that sick "morality" will not be limited to a hatred of their own race. It is hilarious to listen to conservatives whine about those who hate America when their idea of "True Americanism" is to hate their race.

The Curse of Union

IRAQ CAN NEVER BE FREE until it is broken down into sane parts. When I was in Africa, a White government still ruled in Rhodesia, now Zimbabwe. We said that the minute the Communist guerrillas took over the government there, the big tribe would slaughter the smaller tribe. Liberals said no such slaughter would take place. As soon as Black rule arrived, the majority tribe slaughtered the minority tribe. Zimbabwe had about three million Shona, the slaughterers, and two million Bele, the slaughterees. Further north in Africa, one tribe committed what even liberals admit was genocide on the other.

In every African country tribes hate each other or kill each other. Liberals and respectable conservatives say that what is needed is Marxism or Social Progress or Christianity to make tribes stop killing each other. Let me ask an unrespectable question: Why are those tribes that hate each other jammed together in the same country?

The reason was stated by General Wesley Clark, "There is no room in today's Europe for ethnically pure countries." As a liberal, Clark demands that American troops be used to force different people to live under the same government.

Russia is already destitute, but it is spending what little money it has forcing the Moslem country of Chechnya to stay within Russia.

It took Tito, an absolute tyrant, to hold the gaggle of peoples called Yugoslavia together. Once Tito died, Yugoslavia fell apart. Now independent Croatia is at peace because it is made up of Croatians. And where is the bleeding going on in old Yugoslavia? War continues in areas where ethnic Albanians are forced to live in the same country with ethnic Serbs, of course.

So we all agree that the solution to the problems there is to force these hostile groups to live together by force. It is no accident that Iraq is a ridiculous combination of hostile peoples with Sunnis, Shiites and Kurds. The moment the Communist tyranny ended, the Glorious Union, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, fell apart.

Killing people to force them to live under the same government is called "territorial integrity." It is the Lincoln legacy of "Preserving the Union," which killed more Americans than all our other wars put together.

"Preserving the Union" is killing people today. It is the main engine of tyranny around the world. Forcing hostile peoples under the same government to produce a tyranny is a very, very old tactic. The Romans called it "divide and conquer."

'Tribe' is the Liberal Word for 'Nigger'

WHEN MILLIONS of White people have the same language and the same culture we call it a "nation".

When millions of Africans have the same language and the same culture we call it a "tribe." In that sense, an African tribe is not that different from a European nation. But the word "tribe" is a major put-down, exactly like "nigger." But whereas a respectable conservative will go ballistic if you say "nigger," liberals and conservatives freely use the word "tribe." The reason for this is that the African "tribe" defies "territorial integrity." Liberals like that word "tribe" because it represents exactly the kind of natural combination of a people that liberals are dedicated to destroying. Liberals' overwhelming interest is in breaking up White countries and bringing in the Third World with immigration and integration. But they also automatically reject the idea of African countries being made up of natural African nations or "tribes."

Liberals are as fanatically devoted to "territorial integrity" as Lincoln conservatives are. Liberals want artificial states that force hostile groups to live together so that they can plan the "new society" from the ground up. Swaziland and Lesotho are stable, relatively free African countries. They are each made up of a single tribe. Call it a tribe or a nation, it is a natural union.

There will be no peace as long as different nations and tribes are forced together under the same flag.

Pennies On My Eyes

by Ben Parker

MY CAR BROKE DOWN and now I'm surrounded by life-sucking alien beings like in some bad science fiction movie. Like in a shark cage looking out at primitive but dangerous animals banging their dumb heads against the bars trying to get at me. Drowning in a sea of foreign scum and raceless White people. Suffocating in a bustling sty overrun with people of indeterminate race and dubious gender.

Disaffected goonies and goonettes and their spawn in every shade of brown. Morally aimless guttersnipes unmindful of remissful grooming and unfortunate dentistry showing the random gold tooth and bad breath. Dreadlocked, jaundiced Jamaicans selling drugs to cornrowed Aborigines dripping with AIDS. Look to the skies, then put pennies on my eyes.

A cacophony fills the fetid night air with monkeychatter, gibbering, squeaks and squawks, languages so primitive they don't have alphabets. Gunshots, screams, Zulu jungle bass so loud it is materializing in the visible spectrum. Sub-herds of dark, wall-eyed specimens vibrate past in machines that drag the ground with all the windows blown out from explosions going off in the trunk. Pest houses sag under the weight of Philistines, voodoo Haitians, bedswervers, campesinos and disenthralled witches. A stiff cadaver sits among the trash cans on the sidewalk. Look to the skies, then put pennies on my eyes.

Black juveniles stoned on drugs they concocted in moldy kitchens take random shots at passers by with stolen guns. Gangsta contortionists fornicate between parked cars. Panmixia reigns. Low-rent miscegenation by louche women who breed with any race and have dun-colored babies that cry for unknown fathers. Look to the skies, then put pennies on my eyes.

Hooked-nosed Semites hire Somali bushmen to guard their pawn shops. Korean liquor store owners station their troll-like sons on rooftops with automatic weapons.

The smell of curry, refried beans, booze, open-pit dog, ethnic sweat, blood and death, ubiquitous.

Cannibals with end stage Kuru arguing with Gypsies over a dead cat. Urine-soaked old tribesmen sleep in alleys while vermin and snot-covered octoroons hide under abandoned cars eating dirt and trying to count the tire treads.

Drive me to the edge of town and let me out. I'll come back in your dreams with words floating up out of my mouth, no sounds, just big cloud script letters spelling out — Look to the skies, then put pennies on my eyes.

Homosexuality as a Weapon

HOMOSEXUALITY is being intensively promoted by the Jews as one phase of their campaign to liquidate our race, which they evidently regard as unreliable livestock. And no one is offering any rational opposition to what is becoming a homosexual epidemic.

Anita Bryant and David Noebel are probably sincere (I am acquainted with the latter, and I feel certain that he is; I have not met the former, but see no reason to doubt her sincerity), but their efforts are necessarily ineffectual and for that reason are mildly encouraged by the Jews, who give them some publicity in their press as typical opponents of "sexual freedom." Both base part of their opposition on the Christian superstition (i.e., the Jews' greatest hoax) and tell people that sexual perversion is wrong 'cause Jesus says "naughty, naughty" — an argument which merely excites laughter in persons who are rational and have a modicum of education.

The argument is self-defeating for several reasons. To begin with, it is not true. The recent recovery by Professor Mortimer Smith of part of the homosexual episode that was deleted from the gospel of "Mark" (the one that was included in the "New Testament" when it was thrown together in the Fourth Century by the sect that became "orthodox") shows that the Christian sects which overtly practiced homosexuality had good authority for it in the then-current tales about Jesus. And, of course, the Christian holy men have in all ages been the foremost practitioners of male homosexuality, and are notoriously so today, probably because the salvation-business attracts males who are insufficiently masculine.

There are undoubtedly two causes of homosexuality, biological degeneracy and induced perversion, and the great difficulty is in determining the relative importance of the two causes, since we know so little about the inheritance of mental characteristics that the biological cause is certain only when accompanied by anatomical abnormality. Induced perversion is our principal concern, since it is the only one that we can try to check at present. Here there is a further division, for we must distinguish between exclusive homosexuality (or virtually exclusive, since some perverts marry and beget children, presumably as protective covering) and "bisexuality," which is so much in fashion now.

For example, according to reports that I see no reason to doubt, one of the largest fraternities on the campus of the local university, which, perhaps significantly, is the one that particularly tries to enlist White athletes, has a homosexual orgy as its ceremony of initiation into the fraternity to make certain that all the members enjoy such fun, but they also bring in "coeds" frequently for general copulation, which all the members are said to enjoy also. The phenomenal vogue of "bisexuality" in our time is almost certainly a matter of fashion, i.e., induced by current education, but it also makes it difficult to distinguish between the two types who practice homosexuality.

As you probably know, pornography is one of the most lucrative businesses in the United States as well as a principal weapon of Jewish subversion. Recent trends in that field include: (1) The major pornographic periodicals (of which there are ten, all with paid circulations of from 2,000,000 to 7,000,000, which are for sale on all newsstands) are still heterosexual in their photography, showing attractive females and copulation between male and female, with occasional copulation between females, but never between males. A major part of these journals, however, consists of articles that are not illustrated, comprising both letters from readers who have new ideas about copulation or advice from experts on that subject. These now show a marked increase in emphasis on "bisexuality." (2) Pornographic periodicals for homosexuals are still a specialized field, and the magazines devoted to it have comparatively small circulations (all under 1,000,000, and all but one under 500,000), and are usually sold only in the pornographic stores, not generally on the newsstands.) (3) The same division of fields is found in the motion picture films which are sold for private viewing. The major business is heterosexual. The significant trend in the past two years has been an ever-increasing emphasis on copulation between White women and Congoid males, with copulation between White males and Mongolian females a secondary trend. (4) Films showing males copulating with males have thus far been a specialized business, i.e., are produced by different firms and advertised to different mailing lists. Very recently, however, two of the principal major distributors, who heretofore confined their business to heterosexual films, have begun to offer "bisexual" films and one even offers homosexual films. It will be interesting to see whether these firms find the homosexual element "good business."

The Kinsey reports make the claim that 37% of the male population has had some homosexual adventures. I can express no opinion concerning the reports' reliability, but I observe that the scientific method requires that findings that are to be generally accepted must be subject to independent verification, i.e., the experiment can be duplicated by other investigators with the same results.

This is not true of the Kinsey reports, which, by the way, were financed by one of the Rockefeller foundations. The reports purport to be conclusions drawn from the interrogation of persons (not classified by race or social status and selected by procedures not clearly defined) whose answers were recorded in a code known only to the investigators on cards that are kept secret with a provision for their immediate destruction, should anyone obtain from a court an order for inspection of the data. In these circumstances, it is possible that the data were partly or entirely fabricated by Kinsey and/or his assistants. One cannot accuse them of fraud, but neither can one absolve them of suspicion of it.

The Kinsey report has been attacked by many psychiatrists, who are usually polite enough to profess belief in Kinsey's good faith. I note, for example, that his "37%" conclusion is dismissed as "fantastic" by Drs. Edmund Bergler and William S. Kroger in their book, Kinsey's Myth of Female Sexuality (New York, 1954), p. 185, where they also comment that the effect of his erroneous report (in which they earlier identify twelve methodological errors that "eliminated the last possibility of arriving at even approximately correct results") would be to increase the practice of male homosexuality by convincing the young that it is common and therefore presumably normal. That, undoubtedly, has been the effect.

In fact, if Kinsey had been hired to destroy what was left of sexual morality in this country, he would have manufactured his ostensibly objective report as the most efficacious means of doing so.

However that may be, I believe the only effective opposition to homosexuality must be based on racial grounds, i.e., on considerations that will be disregarded so long as the Jews control the mentality of our hapless race.

At that point, of course, the problem of homosexuality becomes merged with that of the general prostitution of American females. Our public schools try to get children to start copulating as early as possible (that was one of the stated objectives in the "consolidation" of schools, requiring the hauling of children long distances and away from the communities in which their parents reside, while the unstated objective was preparation for "integration" to force White children into the most degrading association with sub-humans). Most schools in which the children are puberate now have special classes to teach copulation, and "health programs" which supply contraceptives to the females so that they will have no hesitation about copulating with any male. No stable family can be founded on a marriage between a man and an unpaid whore for whom he cannot have the slightest respect.

Precious Cargo?

IN 1944-45, I came to know fairly well a member of British Military Intelligence, and I do not have to tell you that men in military intelligence no longer blubber when they read Ouida's The Little Match Girl or snivel when they read Uncle Tom's Cabin.

My acquaintance said that he had been the last man on board the last plane from Singapore before it fell to the Japanese. It was a B-17 or the British equivalent and carried the officers who had remained to the last and some women who had insisted on remaining with them. The Sikh regiments had to be left behind, but were drawn up around the field in their ranks, with that wonderful discipline that the British achieved with such troops. The Japanese were so near that when my acquaintance got on the plane, which was so full that he had to squat down beside the pilot, the plane started its run and the demolition bombs went off progressively behind it. As the plane ran down the field, the pilot's face was blanched as all his efforts to get it to lift failed; he did manage to clear the lights at the end of the field and start out over the Indian Ocean just above the waves. Investigation showed what was wrong: The tail section was literally stacked with fat Chinese merchants who had paid $10,000 apiece to be smuggled aboard.

And so the plane flew on to Darwin at an altitude of one hundred feet, at best, above the ocean. Of course, in addition to the danger of skimming the waves, the consumption of gasoline is much greater at low altitudes. The plane landed with empty fuel tanks, and it would not have landed at all had it encountered head winds or rough weather.

Such was the story, and I remind you that the narrator was a hard-bitten veteran of what many believe to be the most hard-bitten branch of military service. When I asked him, "Didn't the plane have bomb-bays through which you could jettison the excess cargo?" he was taken aback. Apparently neither he nor any of the other Britons had thought of that at the time. That, I am afraid, is a commentary on our race.

Upon consideration, however, he did admit that they had been culpable in risking the lives of well-born women and of officers of invaluable and irreplaceable talent (he told me the names of some aboard but my memory is too hazy to trust, except that they included men who lived to command with distinction thereafter) for the sake of Oriental and potentially enemy stowaways. So far as I could learn, it wouldn't have been "sporting" to dump them. So I decided that there was some irremediable flaw in our race – unless you prefer the explanation that the British also lose wars on the playing fields of Eton.

Chertoff has a very strange definition of "possession." It's an Alice-in-Wonderland definition in which you can "possess" a firearm without owning it – in fact, without even touching it or seeing it. Apparently you can "possess" a firearm by just talking about it. You can, it seems, "possess" a firearm by just being on the same property where it is located. Does this mean that I "possess" an arsenal of firearms when I walk into the local police station because large numbers of firearms are there? Does this mean that I "possess" one million dollars when I walk into the lobby of the Bank of America or that I "possess" Faith Hill if I go to one of her concerts? If 50 people go to a home where a gun is under the mattress in the bedroom, do all 50 of them "possess" the gun?

There are a couple of things the Chertoff gang didn't expect. The White community is rallying behind the Doles family. A National Alliance member, very prominent in his community, was able to pull some strings and get a prominent law firm, that of former U.S. Attorney and Congressman Bob Barr, to agree to take the case – and to take it at only 25% of the normal fee, which is not just a matter of saving $150,000, but literally means that what was flatly impossible before has now entered the realm of the possible. A National Alliance member and VNN humorist has set up a matching fund of $25,000, and will double the contribution of every person who gives to the Doles Defense Fund this month. At Alliance meetings and conferences all over the continent, collections have been taken up for the Doles family. Although the initial attorney's fees have been paid, as I write there are still many thousands to go before the Doles family wll be able to say "yes, go ahead" to Bob Barr. Let's make that happen.

Let's teach the Chertoff gang a lesson they'll never forget. Chester Doles, Jr. needs our help right now. His legal defense is going to be expensive. He's facing a possible ten years or more in prison. He is an innocent victim of government terror. The next victim may be the peace activist next door. The next victim may be the man who defends his family from a killer with a firearm. The next victim may be you. Support Chester Doles by sending as much as you can spare to: Doles Defense Fund, P.O. Box 1532, Dahlonega, GA 30533

For further information and regular updates on the Chester Doles case, visit www.freechesterdoles.com.

NATIONAL VANGUARD has also had its share of struggles and triumphs recently. We are working hard on finding the funds and the talent to start our on-line interactive news service soon, and a number of generous and gifted volunteer writers and editors have stepped forward. We won't disappoint you.

Some of the articles we promised you will be in our next issue instead of this one, such as the highly-anticipated interview with the pioneer bar none of the White Internet, Don Black. But the reason for the delay is a good one: our recent call for writers and the response to our Forum section have both been overwhelmingly successful, and there are only so many pages per issue of the magazine.

Lastly, a direct mail outreach to former Liberty Bell magazine subscribers swelled our subscription rolls, too.

I and all of the NATIONAL VANGUARD staff give our warmest welcome to our new readers.

EYE ON THE MEDIA by Victor Wolzek

Media and the 'Profit Motive'

"57 channels and nothing on"
– Bruce Springsteen

THE BIG LIE about the mainstream media is that, "like all businesses," they are first and foremost profit-driven. Not true. Money serves as their fuel and measure, but not as their goal. Today's mainstream media are first and foremost Jewish propaganda channels.

While the agitprop flowing through these channels aims to be as profitable as possible, only material that advances Jewish interests or is utterly benign to them is allowed in. Material that crosses Jewish interests, no matter how marketable or excellent, is denied admission. Hatred of non-Jews, particularly White Gentiles, is the spiritual heart of Jewry. Thus, the Jewish media operate on their own hate-based version of Pascal's Wager in which Jewish Hate serves as Pascal's Belief, and Failure to Hate as Pascal's Refusal to Believe. The Jewish media's Wager of Hate maps out like this:

Programming that Hates, i.e., denigrates and demonizes Whites...

1. Wins doubly if it is profitable, for it advances Jewish interests while making money for some Jews.

2. Wins if it is not profitable, for it advances Jewish interests while losing money only for some Jews.

Programming that Fails to Hate, i.e., to denigrate and demonize Whites...

1. Loses if it is profitable, for it damages Jewish interests while making money only for some Jews.

2. Loses doubly if it is not profitable, for it damages Jewish interests while losing money for some Jews.

The Jewish media's Wager of Hate establishes the context in which all media decisions are made. Profit may rule the day once inside this context, but ultimately it is a second-tier consideration.

This Big Lie that media are primarily profit-driven achieves two diabolical social effects on White America. It fuels the illusory belief that the media around us are strictly dictated by consumer demand. This belief, as coldly economic as it may sound, is psychological in nature; it serves to dispel stirring White discontent. No matter how lowbrow, repulsive, or racially offensive we find what's on our TVs, radios, or theater screens; our Playstations, DVD and CD players; and on our book shelves and magazine racks, it is difficult for us to complain. We fail to realize we're being murdered by this material by an alien minority because we assume what's offered must be what "most consumers" – the majority of whom are White – want. It appeals to White-everyman's democratic sense of virtue: If media content is "voted on" with American dollars, then it's just too bad if we happen not to like the candidates as much as everyone else does.

More importantly, the Big Lie that media are principally profit-driven undermines in advance any inquiry into "who" controls the media. After all, if money pure and simple is the name of the game, then it follows that those running the show must be the best at delivering what the public wants. What difference does it make if media control is predominantly Jewish or Amish if those at the helm have no choice but to do the masses' bidding? Jew film critic Michael Medved deploys this classically Jewish form of misdirection in his cocky 1996 Moment article, "Jews Run Hollywood, So What?"

So what? So no matter how packed the beer halls in Britain were when Skrewdriver was playing they couldn't get a formal, big company deal and were actively suppressed by the music press in attempt to "extinguish the fire for lack of oxygen" (see Paul London's "Nazi Rockstar: Ian Stuart - Skrewdriver Biography"). So White, Catholic family man and mega-star Mel Gibson can't get financial backing for The Passion, a film telling 'The Greatest Story Ever Told' and is forced to fund it himself because a pre-Vatican II depiction of the crucifixion isn't "good for Jews." So White creativity, if it desires access to the world, must sublimate itself into a form of racial self-flagellation. It compels ambitious and talented Whites to choose between joining the Jewish war against the White race or languishing in obscurity. Having reduced America and much of Europe to a deracinated consumer society in which virtue is measured in decimal points and dollar signs, the decision for most is far too easy to make. That's what, Jew Medved.

The Jewish media's Wager of Hate is in full effect, and its foul fruits are all around us. Jewish Hate propaganda is everywhere, in as many guises as there are genres and forms. Whether producing mass media, ruining careers, or occupying nations,

Medved had "chutzpah."

Jewish strategy is always the same: use a veneer of variety and difference to obscure movement in a single direction. Individual Jewish winds may blow in 360 different directions, but the Jewish tornado cuts a single swath through White culture.

To NATIONAL VANGUARD readers and National Alliance members, this may seem a truism. No doubt many reading this have long ago "killed their TV."

And many of those who keep it around for occasional use would never dream of subscribing to pay channels like HBO. Intelligent people are well aware that movies, radio, comedy, commercials, Internet ads — all forms of media — are pushing the dispossession of Whites in order to secure Judeo-dominance. To the degree that this is true, keeping an "Eye on the Media" may seem unnecessary. Yet, cataloguing specific instances of these media hate crimes will provide crucial evidence when the indictment against the Jews for the attempted murder of the White race is levied. When brought together, the concrete examples create a kind of topographical review of contemporary culture.

The quotes and photos captured, cut out, and glued here in one place are the beginning of a mosaic of Jew-wrought modern decadence, a flurry frozen in time of the anti-White political messages and cultural indicators spewed at ordinary Americans and people all over the Western world on a daily basis. Let's see what's playing.

Bill Maher: Semitically Correct Coward, Liar as 'Rebel'

JEW BILL MAHER is most famous for the crash and burn of Politically Incorrect, a half-hour show on ABC in which Maher and various celebrity guests mix it up over social and political issues. While accepting all of the important Jew-ordained premises at the root of most modern problems, Maher occasionally mocked certain liberal excesses and took a libertarian line which in the Propasphere — the media realm of lies, false opposition and propaganda — is just pseudo-daring enough to warrant the P.I. label. Maher's faux iconoclasm crossed Jewish interests and blew up in his face however when, after 9/11, in regard to the media repetition that the hijackers were cowards, he said on his show: "We have been the cowards, lobbing cruise missiles from 2,000 miles away. That's cowardly. Staying in the airplane when it hits the building, say what you want about it, it's not cowardly." Advertisers pulled out. Pressure was on. The show was cancelled shortly thereafter. Less then a year later, exhibiting a peculiarly Jewish resilience, Maher had a deal with HBO.

The TV promotions for HBO's Real Time with Bill Maher featured a serious Maher championing his new show as a real truth-telling alternative. He goes so far as to say, "We're not a nation of rebels, we're a nation of lemmings. We need more rebels who lead by example. I'm one of them." Apparently Jew comics will steal from anyone, even the late Dr. Pierce.

Real Time with Bill Maher premiered Friday, February 21, 2003, and the results could not be more telling.

In the opening monologue of the first episode of his new show, Maher says, "I really feel like I've landed at home here. The great thing about HBO and this show tonight is we are going on the air without commercials or any advertising! How about that?" (Roar of applause.) Punch line: "Just like my old show." (More laughter.)

No doubt unintentionally, this opening joke was pregnant with meaning, foretelling all we were about to see, and demonstrating the limits of what is allowed to be seen. The joke hinges on the contrast between a network like HBO, where absence of advertising revenue allegedly means freedom, and ABC, where absence of advertising revenue means cancellation. When Maher says he feels "at home," the implication is that he is finally in a realm unfettered by advertising concerns, where a bold, brash, truth-telling Jew comic can finally express himself uncensored, no-holds-barred. Unfortunately, it turns out the new show is just like the old show in every way. When the king of the "politically incorrect" is unleashed, what he delivers up is as Semitically correct as anything else out there. The guests he features: Pro-Israel Rep. Dana Rohrabacher (R. California), pro-Black author Michael Eric Dyson (Why I Love Black Women), pro-Jewish neocon author Ann Coulter (Slander), and Zionist Jew comic Larry Miller. The comic featured in the weekly dose of what Maher hails as "completely uncensored, cutting-edge comedy"? Jewess Sarah Silverman. The subject of more than half of her "too radical for the mainstream" routine? Jews, Jewishness and — drum roll please — the 'Holocaust.' The butt of a slew of her jokes? 'Nazis,' racists, and of course Hitler.

Thanks, Bill Maher, for offering the world a real alternative. — V. W.

Howard Stern: Jewish Shock Jock on 'the Jooos'

THIS MAY very well be a NATIONAL VANGUARD exclusive. I've been unable to find any other accounts of it anywhere. Attempts to get official transcripts have been unsuccessful. No doubt the myriad of Stern fans who record his shows and post unauthorized sound clips on the Web will eventually hit upon this gold mine. But until then I offer this, my paraphrased (quoted as closely as possible) account of Howard Stern's truly shocking denial of Jewish influence in America.

Unlike most Jews who lie live, directly to America, Stern fails to evoke the slightest sense of plausibility. Key parts of his brazen lies directly quoted are indicated as such.

Excerpt from The Howard Stern Show, Wednesday, March 13, 2003, approximately 7:30 AM PST; Stern on James Moran's comments about Jewish power and the war:

Howard: Power. What power? Jews have no power. [direct quote] They are such an infinitesimal minority in this country. How can 2% of the people change the course of a war? [direct quote] ... It's the big money blue-bloods, [direct quote] the Rockefellers and oil men. And they just sit back, laugh, and count their money when they hear people blame it on the jooos (inflection his) [direct quote]... This is the kind of stuff they bank on, that divides the country....

A very calm, sincere caller then asked: Howard, don't you think Jews have something to do with this?

Howard: Joooos... (inflection his). C'mon, what are you from the KKK? That's ridiculous.

Caller: (Still calm and sincere. This guy is an average Joe, a fan of the show, not a spokesman with an agenda.) I just mean with Israel and all.

Howard: Israel? They'd hate us even if Israel didn't exist. The guy's a monster. He gassed his own people and they weren't Jews. (Laughter) Even his own people aren't his own people. [direct quote] He's always hated us and the only reason we're bothering with him now is because he has so much money he can buy weapons that can hurt us.

Howard's producer Gary chimes in. Gary: (to caller) Let me ask you something: Are you one of those people that thinks 9-11 happened because of Israel? [direct quote - insinuating caller must be a "conspiracy nut" to think Israel has anything to do with the U.S.-Iraq war]

Caller starts to answer. Howard talks over him. Caller either hangs up or is cut off. Howard goes to the next caller. It is Jewish columnist Debbie Schlussell, linking and tying James Moran to Muslim terrorism via campaign donations he allegedly accepted from a Muslim organization, as if the only ethnic interest group allowed to donate to American politicians is Jews. She then starts talking about Wolfowitz.

Howard Stern and companion

The astute listener is left with this preposterous image: Jew columnist Schlussell talking to Jew radio host Stern about Jew Deputy Defense Secretary Wolfowitz while condemning Gentile James Moran for mentioning "the old anti-Semitic canard" of Jewish power!

Apparently the wildly diverse "group" (in scare quotes because allegedly they do not form one) known as Jews can be monolithically offended. — V. W.

Propaganda as 'Comedy': SNL, Fink Sex

THE "Sully and Denise" sketches on Saturday Night Live chronicle the banal misadventures of a young, stupid, hormone-raging and thick-Boston-accented "White trash" high school couple. In this episode Sully (SNL regular Jimmy Fallon) and Denise (SNL regular Jewess Rachel Dratch) are in the crowd of a Bruce Springsteen concert with a nameless friend I'll call "Dude." We're told Dude was going to bring his girlfriend along, "but her water broke." (laughter)

When it's mentioned that Springsteen will play for seven hours, Denise says, "Dude, you're gonna miss the birth of your child!"

Dude replies, "Look, I'm 100% sure Bruce Springsteen is coming out

Saturday Night Live's Rachel Dratch

on that stage. (Pause) I'm only 60% sure the kid coming out of Suzy is mine." (Laughter)

Sully adds: "Yeah, and there ain't no way Springsteen's gonna surprise us by coming out half Black!" (Roar of laughter)

Jewish Fink

Dude: "*Ir*regardless (sic)! ..."

In his half-hour comedy special, Jewish comic Hugh Fink delivers the following bit:

"...I like dating. Recently, I was dating someone I really liked. But, ya know how sometimes you think you know someone but then the 'real person' comes out during sex? It's like: O h h h . . . M m m m , ahhhh...THE JEWS CONTROL THE BANKS AND THE MEDIA!..."

Comic pauses, raises eyebrows, facial expression reads: "Ok, Cuckoo! Cuckoo!"

(Roar of laughter)

The comic and the show's producers all encourage the in-house audience, as well as the at-home viewers to tacitly agree: Anyone who harbors such ideas may seem normal on the outside but is really a nutcase, someone you wouldn't — or shouldn't — want to date, no matter how attractive in other ways. What about the fact that the allegations this comic "cuckoo" blurted happen to be largely true? Truth is no defense.

Propaganda as 'Science': The Discovery Channel

Whites Are a Lip-Plate Away from Enlightenment

AH, THE WORLD of Discovery. Trade in sitcoms and semitically correct crime dramas for educational wonderment and curiosity, right? Wrong. Sadly, this randomly selected Sunday evening lineup is typical.

First learn from the terrestrial wisdom of far off Third Worlders. Then, for contrast, witness the stark consequences of civilized Whites getting all "hung up" on judgmental Western morality. In this order, Discovery features a triple-run of Jewish anthropological revisionism in the tradition of Boas, Mead, and Gould. "Stick Fights and Lip Plates," "Intimate Truths of the Canela Tribe," and "The Marrying Tribe of the Amazon." Herein, we are told, lie the primitive origins of hip American trends such as facial piercings, pro wrestling, and even extreme sports. It's also suggested that there are many cultural benefits to be learned from the promiscuity of tribes that don't marry and the polygamy of tribes that do. The constant message, from beginning to end, from the tone of the musical accompaniment to the professorial narration, from the carefully edited imagery to the softly sculpted script, is this: See how beautiful, orderly, and in tune with nature these non-Whites are? Unlike you, White America!

Left: Zoe tribesmen and a freshly-killed monkey, their favorite food. Right: a high-status Surma woman with large lip plate.

[Scary music begins now. The image of peaceful Third World non-Whites turns to its negative and fades out. The empty screen gives way to the next show's logo.]

Next up is an FBI Files special promising the graphic exploration of "brutal attacks on women" across America. It is not plainly stated, but it is implied throughout that these "cherry picked" cases of violent misogyny are due to America's murderous tradition of Christian morality and White male aggression. Rural and urban White men, it seems, are vile creatures dreadfully lacking the gentle wisdom of the grub-eating, stick-fighting savages displayed in the previous three hours of programming.

And what runs immediately after this televised hate crime committed against White men and Western culture? Believe it or not, "the trinity of hope" loops again: "Stick Fights and Lip Plates," "Intimate Truths of the Canela Tribe," and "The Marrying Tribe of the Amazon." Seriously. In case you missed it the first time.

Those seeking "intelligent, educational programming" from the Discovery Channel instead get the beauty and wonder of primitive non-Whites both coming and going, interrupted only by a quick reminder that White, Western civilization leads to nothing put pathological violence and misogynistic hatred. Note the formal TV Guide show descriptions.

Stick Fights and Lip Plates

60 min. Profiling the Surma people of southwestern Ethiopia, near the border of Southern Sudan. Included: traditional stick fighting; lip plates.

Intimate Truths of the Canela Tribe

60 min. The Canela tribe of central Brazil is studied by Dr. William Crocker, focusing on three tribe members over a 20-year period. Also: why promiscuity is encouraged in Canela society.

Rating: TV-PG; Content: Suggestive Dialog.

The Marrying Tribe of the Amazon

60 min. Observing the society of the Amazonian Zoe people. Included: why multiple partners among husbands and wives is encouraged, and how the extended families function without strife.

Rating: TV-PG; Content: Explicit Sexual Situations.

FBI Files, Deadly Stranger

60 min. Brutal attacks on women in 1995 place FBI agents on a trail that leads from California through Mississippi to Florida in search of a serial killer. Rating: TV-PG.

Propaganda as 'social service': According to this online advertisement for Yahoo! Personals, White women may choose from Blacks or Mestizos. White men not allowed.

Propaganda as 'Biography':

The Case of Im toten Winkel — Hitlers Sekretärin

PEDDLING HITLER is a dangerous game for Jews because in a very real way it is a full-contact sport with Whites — we are directly involved. We are the heirs of the post-WWII era Hitler warned us about. Our present is "the failed destiny of the West," the very future National Socialism was intended to prevent from coming to fruition, the very future Hitler saw as inevitable if he were to fail.

For this reason, Jews have secured a postmortem exclusive proprietorship over "the most evil man the world has ever known." Hitler is always mediated by Jews or Jew-approved Gentiles to ensure he is always framed — prefaced, footnoted, scripted, edited and epilogued — in such a way that all the important issues are ceded in advance to Jewish interests. Professional filmmakers, professors, authors, and artists are permitted to tinker with details, but never key plot points, and never the moral of the story.

Those who dare to "push the boundaries" and "transgress the limits" to explore the reality beneath the politicized clichés get Leuchtered (professionally murdered), Irvinged (discredited, slurred, mocked), Haled (federally entrapped), MacDonalded (suppressed), or Zundeled (criminally persecuted).

Blind Spot, a film currently playing the art house circuit in a few big cities, illustrates how this is true even in a "controversial" film that purports to allow an intimate, firsthand account of Hitler "the man." All the Jewish whining and general "concern" about it "humanizing a monster" (cf.

the hoopla over the movie Max from late last year) creates the false impression that it is a truly alternative account of Hitler, a potentially "dangerous" film that somehow escaped the Judeo-lockdown on media.

Blind Spot chronicles Fraulein Traudl Junge's experiences of Hitler during the period from 1943 to 1945 when, as a 22-year-old woman, she served as his personal secretary. Junge was on site when Hitler survived an assassination attempt, when news arrived of military downturns for the Reich, and when he welcomed various visitors. She was with Hitler, Eva, and the Goebbels family at the end of the war when defeat was certain. Junge transcribed Hitler's last will and testament. Indeed, one of the most moving parts of the film is her account of the sadness and abandonment she felt at the very end, just after Hitler committed suicide.

Less of a documentary than a monologue, the entirety of Blind Spot is footage of an elderly Junge sitting in a chair speaking. Except for the one or two instances when an off-screen voice poses a question, hers is the only voice in the entire film. There is no wartime imagery; no photos, film clips, tape recordings or re-enactments. We see Junge, and she talks. Here is some of what she talks about:

The first ten minutes are devoted to obligatory genuflection before Jews and Jewish interests. In a montage of clips Junge speaks of her naïveté, of her youth, her poor judgment, her emotional need for a father figure and a sense of family and belonging. She speaks of how her early admiration of Hitler has given way to a lifetime of regret and hatred of the man, of coming to know him for the monster he really was, a deceptive charmer who was in fact a genocidal criminal, a madman, evil incarnate, yada yada yada. This montage forms a somber apology and instructs the audience that no matter what transpires over the next 90 minutes, none of it contradicts the official Jewish position.

Traudl Junge, who was once Hitler's secretary.

Junge's mandatory self-flagellation is strewn throughout the movie as well. It culminates in the closing text of the movie, which tells us how just before Junge died of cancer in 2002 at the age of 81, she wrote, "I'm starting to forgive myself."

In the most honest moments of the film Junge admits Hitler fascinated her. The German people considered him a truly great man. Women swooned over him and wrote him love letters. He was a pleasant boss and a fatherly friend. In person he was not at all like he was when speaking at the rallies, with arms stretched out and a booming voice with the intense rolling *R*s. He was polite, courteous, friendly, and well mannered.

Fraulein Junge told the following anecdotes of daily life with der Führer:

Hitler The Animal Lover

Hitler loved his dog Blondi. A dog trainer had schooled Blondi so well that Hitler was in awe of the precocious canine's discipline and intelligence. What particularly amazed him — and he delighted in showing this to guests — was how Blondi would sing on command. He'd say, "Sing, Blondi," and the dog would emit a yodel-like howl. But that is not all. He would then say, "Lower, Blondi," and his beloved four-legged friend would drop an octave.

Sense of Humor

A story I found hilarious was Junge's account of when, after her trial period, Hitler asked her if she would like to stay on and continue to be his secretary. She described how nervous she was when he called her for a meeting. She entered the room and Hitler was there with one or two others. He said something like, "Your obligation is almost up. You've done a wonderful job. Would you like to stay?... As you must imagine, it is difficult for me to hire young pretty women, because they get married and run off!" He smiled and said, "Perhaps I should implement a policy of hiring only ugly women with unattractive facial disfigurements, like the Negroes with plates in their lips."

Sense of Political Purpose

Junge explains she was hired as a personal secretary, not a military secretary, and that she did not transcribe military documents. She also notes how rare political conversation was "around the office" or in any of the settings in which Hitler engaged with his assistants (e.g., during lunch or evening tea). However, the few times she did hear him speak politically were memorable not only for their rarity, but for the deep seriousness of his conviction and commitment. According to Junge, even in the darkest moments nearing the close of the war Hitler said failing, surrendering, or negotiating for peace were not options. Bolshevism had to be stopped now or it would be unstoppable. "If the West destroys Germany," he said, "they will be destroying themselves; they will not be able to escape international Jewry without Germany." Hitler also explained to Junge that he could not negotiate for peace because international Jewry and the Allies it controls would "murder Germany, rape its women, castrate its men, raze its industry, and strip it of its ability to be an independent nation and people." Compromise would not spare Germans, Hitler believed. It would ensure their demise.

"Those who dare to 'transgress the limits' get Leuchtered (professionally murdered), Irvinged (discredited, slurred, mocked), Haled (federally entrapped), MacDonalded (suppressed), or Zundeled (criminally persecuted)."

Nearing the end of the film, Traudl Junge says that she'd like to ask Hitler, in this world or the next, what if you discovered you had Jewish blood, would you gas yourself?

There it is, an allusion to the old "gas chamber" canard. Junge then explains how she could be so foolish as to not see through Hitler's admirable surface to the genocidal monster underneath, with this telling bit:

> For years after the war there was nothing, just silence... The Nuremberg trials revealed some of the horrible things done... None of us knew what was going on outside of our immediate place... Only afterward did we know the extent of the criminality, that six million Jews were murdered, and that thousands of other religions and peoples were killed... Then, for whatever reason, in the 1960s all this information came out. So many books and movies, so many people who suffered and survived came forward and spoke... all of his terrible secrets were uncovered... I loved him like a father, but love quickly turns to hate when the one you love disappoints you...

Nuremberg trials. Gassings. The sacred "six million." Of course.

Where there are Jews there is reality reversal. While Junge's admiration for Hitler and National Socialism was based on her actual experience of the man, the place and the time, she is re-educated by Jews to see her experience as a lie forged of her own weakness, the result of her "girlish naïveté" and "personal insecurities." The truth, says the Jew, is in these books, written, funded, published, promoted, distributed and taught by Jews. Yes, Fraulein Junge, "Then, for whatever reason, in the 1960s all this information came out." Did it ever. Jewish lies displaced reality for Junge back then just as they continue to displace reality for Whites throughout the West today.

The danger in Jews peddling Hitler for propaganda and profit is that we Whites will see through their heavy-handed framing to the worldview expressed by the man himself and see the truth of his words reflected in the world around us. So, naturally, I was most curious about how this woman who spent her teens and early 20s in Hitler's Germany and the rest of her life in an increasingly Bolshevised, Judaized West would mark the contrast. I was astonished to watch her say this:

> After the war and his suicide, I had no idea what to expect the world to be like. For so long we were all in our little circle, and for so long I had heard him speak of what the world would be like if National Socialism failed. And after it was all over I discovered the world outside was not at all as he said. None of it was true. Rather than the oppression and downfall he described, there was a profound sense of liberation, of freedom. The Americans were kind and wonderful democrats.

None of it was true. Really? Bolsheviks did not mass-rape German women? The Allies did not trap Germans in concentration camps and starve them to death? Dresden was not firebombed? Jews did not institute Soviet-style re-education in German schools? Jewish media has not vilified and demonized White culture in general and German culture in particular as a prelude to unraveling and destroying White culture? Jews have not targeted White nations for massive non-White immigration? Had any of this been pointed out to her on camera – which it wasn't – no doubt she would have explained how that's "different," how its horror pales in comparison to Hitler's "crimes against humanity." The man she once admired she now calls the "greatest criminal who ever lived."

Even if it is the case that Junge's postwar experience was so singularly sheltered she never experienced any of the horrors described above (i.e., if she spent the past 50 years in a cabin on an isolated mountaintop somewhere), notice the double standard involved in what she accepts as truth. Junge surrenders her personal experience for the narratives of Jews when it comes to Hitler, but white-knuckles her personal experience in lieu of the now broadly disseminated truth to justify the goodness of the Allies, the wrongness of Hitler's vision, and the tragedy of his attempt to secure a Jew-free Europe. As with the Jews who didn't crush this film before it ever got off the ground, the only unifying principle ordering Junge's thoughts and beliefs in her old age is: what is good for Jews? What do I have to say to be forgiven by the Jewish media, and therefore the world?

At the end of the interviews, nearing the end of her life, Traudl Junge is claimed to have told Andre Heller, the film's director, "I have finally let go of my story. Now I feel the world [read: the Jewish media] is letting go of me."

Yes, Traudl, None of it was true. Rather than the oppression and downfall he described, there was a profound sense of liberation, of freedom.

Sure there was. – V. W.

Edward Abbey: A Life

by James M. Cahalan; University of Arizona Press, Tucson.

WHEN ASKED if he would push the plunger that would ignite the explosive to blow up Glenn Canyon Dam, Ed Abbey replied: "No, but I would hold the flashlight." And that is what he did for the environmental movement; he held the flashlight, showed the way, and motivated millions of people to get involved. In 23 books (two of which were made into movies), dozens of essays, book reviews, and letters to the editor, he spoke out in an unequivocal, intelligent voice that advocated action over words in defense of Mother Earth. As he put it: "Philosophy without action is the ruin of the soul."

Abbey's 1975 novel, The Monkey Wrench Gang, is a humorous romp about four environmental activists who terrorized the American southwest committing industrial sabotage by disabling heavy equipment, burning down billboards, and pulling up survey stakes in their effort to stop the destruction of nature. However, there was no personal violence and no people were hurt.

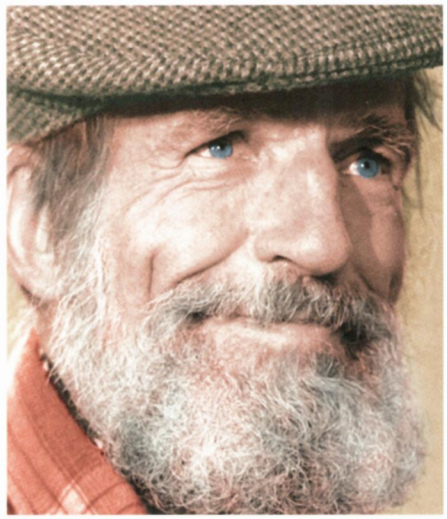
One of those who took action after reading The Monkey Wrench Gang was Dave Foreman. Mr. Foreman, formerly a lobbyist for the Wilderness Society, founded Earth First! which he once described as: "...made up of Ed Abbey style conservationists... we were rednecks for wilderness." By the late 1980s the Earth First! Journal had 10,000 subscribers. In 1998, Foreman said: "...if someone really analyzed early Earth First!, they [sic] would see that it was actually much closer originally to a militia, right-wing kind of group, than the kind of left-wing, anarchist thing it is now."

Abbey was born in 1927 in Indiana, Pennsylvania, a few hours north of Hillsboro, West Virginia. A six-foot-three-inch self-proclaimed Appalachian hillbilly, he earned his master's degree in Philosophy with a thesis on "Anarchism and the Morality of Violence."

Abbey worked 19 seasons for the National Park Service as a park ranger and fire tower lookout in some of the most beautiful natural settings in America. His first non-fiction book, Desert Solitaire (1968), was the result of his assignment to Arches National Park in Utah. In Desert Solitaire, he illuminated an attitude toward nature that would soon be shared by many.

In the early 1980s, Ed Abbey wrote essays and letters to the editor (some were published in the New York Review of Books) stating that the border between the U.S. and Mexico should be sealed off with electric fences and patrolled by the military. He explained that: "Taking in the surplus populations of Latin America will increase social troubles without really doing much to help Mexico and the others..."

He wrote that the American way of life had to be protected against the



EDWARD ABBEY, who stated in his diary shortly before his death on March 2, 1989, in Tucson, Arizona: "Why book reviewers hate my books: Because the books are really no good? Perhaps. But I think I've got a better explanation. Almost all reviewers, these days, are members of and adherents to some anxious particular sect or faction. I.e., they are lesbians and New Agers or fem-libbers or (even worse) male fem-libbers or technophiles or self-hating white liberals or right wing conservatives or Growth maniacs or Negroes or female Negroes or Third-World lesbian militant Negro poetesses or closet Marxists (Marxoids) or futurologists or academical specialists or Chicano ideologues or ballerinas or Kowboy Kultists or Kerouac Kultists or Henry James Minimalist Perfectionists or one-tenth Chippewa 'Native American' Indians or at the very least all-inclusive Official Chickensh— Correct-Thinking Liberals etc. etc. As such, any member of any one of those majority minorities is going to find for certain a few remarks in any of my books that will offend/enrage 's/he' to the marrow, leading inevitably in turn, on the part of such sectarian book reviewers, to a denunciation not merely of the offending passage, but of the entire book, and not merely of the book, but of the author too."

Mexican threat "...to degrade and cheapen it downward to the Hispanic standard... the rising tide of human muck... that is drowning our cities, flowing over our borders, and threatening everything good and free and spacious that still remains in American life."

In 1983, in the Phoenix New Times, Abbey wrote: "Exactly as I stated, anyone who dares to oppose immigration will be attacked as a racist..." He concluded: "At some point soon our Anglo-liberal guilt neurosis must yield to common sense and enlightened self-interest."

Not all his ventures in life were successes. During his 62 years, Abbey had five marriages (and fathered five children), and it is said that he was faithful only in his last. All of his wives were in their teens or twenties. He admitted that he "loved to be in love." He once wrote:

> My god! I'm thinking, what incredible sh – we put up with most of our lives – the domestic routine (same old wife every night), the stupid and useless and degrading jobs, the insufferable arrogance of elected officials, the crafty cheating and the slimy advertising of the businessman, the tedious wars in which we kill our buddies instead of our real enemies back home in the capital, the foul, diseased and hideous cities and towns we live in, the constant petty tyranny of automatic washers and automobiles and tv machines and telephones! Ah Christ!, what intolerable garbage and what utterly useless crap we bury ourselves in day by day, while patiently enduring at the same time the creeping strangulation of the clean white collar and the rich but modest four-in-hand garrote!

His understanding of the family and of sexual loyalty as the basis for the life of the race was wanting. But he expressed his disdain for the death-while-living of what Brooks Adams called "economic man" – and his hope for the rebirth of spiritual man – in a way that no one else has ever matched.

Ed Abbey passed away in 1989 and was illegally buried at a secret location in southwestern Arizona's Cabeza Prieta wilderness. This short review barely scratches the cover of Edward Abbey: A Life, the latest and by far most thorough biography of this American original. – Ben Parker

In Search of Ancient Israel

by Philp R. Davies; Sheffield Academic Press; Sheffield, England.

PROFESSOR Philip R. Davies of the University of Sheffield is the author of an important short introductory work on a controversial subject. His book In Search of Ancient Israel, although a scholarly work, is quite readable, as it was Professor Davies' intent to write it for "students rather more than for my colleagues, for scholars of the future rather than for those of the past or present." The book has aroused considerable controversy in certain circles. This is because there exists at the present time a wide gulf between what the educated non-Zionist specialists believe to be true about ancient Israel and what the general public presumes is true – and there are those in high places who are determined to keep it that way.

The religious group commonly known as the Mormons have a holy book called the Book of Mormon, which claims to set forth the history of ancient North America. The Book of Mormon was written well after the events it claims to describe, and the 'history' it relates exists only in its own pages.

Were it not for this book, the tales it tells would be unknown, since the external evidence to support them does not exist. With the exception of a number of pious Mormons, this history is ignored by both scholars and the public at large. No public school textbooks, popular histories, or History Channel documentaries concern themselves with the history of ancient North America as elaborated in the Mormon holy book. This history is not debated or refuted, but is rather completely ignored; and with good reason, as there exists no primary evidence to support it and much evidence to dispute it.

When we come to the history of ancient Israel, we encounter a radically different situation. School textbooks, popular histories, and History Channel documentaries all concur in relating a history that is, for all intents and purposes, a paraphrase of the tales set forth in the 'Old Testament,' the collection of Jewish holy books that were deemed to be authoritative by the leading faction of the Jewish establishment at the end of the first century C.E., and that were subsequently incorporated into the sacred scriptures of the Catholic Church. Just like the stories in the Mormon holy book, the Old Testament tales of ancient Israel are unverifiable and therefore have no independent existence outside of its pages. But they are widely accepted and repeated even in secular contexts.

Why is this? A good answer was given by the respected Italian scholar

Giovanni Garbini, Professor of Semitic Philology at the University of Rome: "Down to the present day, for reasons that can be easily imagined, the Jewish tradition has exercised such a theological or even psychological pressure that it has conditioned even historical research, which only very recently, thanks also to key discoveries, has begun to release itself from the fetters in which it had been bound during our century by famous scholars, for whom an unacknowledged confessional interest now appears to have predominated over a concern for scientific objectivity."

Over the past thirty years there has been a radical change in the perception of ancient Israel by many scholars. This change did not take place without struggle. An example: Today, Thomas L. Thompson is a distinguished Professor of Biblical Studies at the University of Copenhagen. In the early 1970s, he researched and published a book (The Historicity of the Patriarchal Narratives, Berlin 1974) dealing with ancient Israel based on archeological evidence rather than Biblical material. Due to the controversy over this approach, he was blackballed from university teaching, and worked as a house painter for ten years in order to support his family. He relates the story of an Israeli "scholar" who would burst into conferences where such ideas were being proposed, and literally scream that the proponents of such ideas were "anti-Semitic." Considering that the foundations of political Zionism rest on the Biblical account of the creation of ancient Israel, such tactics should not have been unexpected.

In his book, Professor Davies asserts that the ancient Israel described in the Bible is a literary work, based on ideology, as opposed to an historical work based on discernible evidence. He undertakes to ascertain what we actually know about ancient Israel, aside from the "historical" statements that were included in the Old Testament, the earliest extant copies of which come from the Dead Sea area and are dated to the first century B.C.E. — over 1,000 years after the period that they purport to describe.

What primary extra-biblical information concerning ancient Israel is available to us? The answer is, very little. Even the origin of the name "Israel" is obscure. It would appear that the original god of the entity called Israel was not Yahweh but rather El. This is because the name Israel is based on the divine name El, the chief god of the Syrian pantheon, rather than on the divine name Yahweh, the chief god of the Old Testament. The first extra-Biblical reference to Israel comes from the Merneptah Stele. This was an inscription carved in stone sometime around 1208 B.C.E. on behalf of the Egyptian king named Merneptah. This stele describes the havoc Merneptah claims to have inflicted on his adversaries. The pertinent part reads as follows: "Israel lies desolate; its seed is no more." Whether the term Israel refers to an ethnic or a geographic entity is not clear, and, although most scholars assume that "seed" refers to human offspring, it could refer to crops. We next encounter primary documents that mention Israel by name about 350 years later, in the form of two inscriptions from Shalmaneser III, King of Assyria and self-styled "King of the World." On one inscription he claims to have inflicted a heavy defeat against a coalition of twelve Syrian states including Israel under King Ahab, while on the second "Jehu, son of Omri" is both mentioned and depicted as a captive. Next comes the famous Moabite Stele, which is dated to about 840 B.C.E. and is an inscription from King Mesha of Moab. The inscription states (among other things) that Moab had come under the domination of Israel when Omri was king, but that he, Mesha, revolted and threw off the yoke of Omri. The Moabite king claims "I have triumphed over him and over his house while Israel hath perished." Sometime prior to 800 B.C.E. the Assyrian King Adad-nirari III led a military expedition into the region of Syria and Palestine and left two stone inscriptions, in which he claims to have forced into submission the various political entities of that region. Although he refers to the "Land of Omri" and to "Joash of Samaria" he never uses the term Israel. Finally, the Assyrian king Sargon II left an inscription referring to his conquest of the town of Samaria and all of "Omri-land," which occurred about 722 B.C.E. This territory was subsequently incorporated into the Assyrian Empire and ceased to have any sort of independent existence.

That's it for primary material concerning the kingdom that — although called "Israel" in the Bible — could just as easily be called "Omri-land" or Samaria if there were no Bible. There is no primary evidence (or at least none that has been discovered) for Abraham or the other Patriarchs, Moses, Joshua, the conquest, the great empire of David, or even of David himself or his son Solomon. The great kings of Egypt, Mesopotamia, and Syria often corresponded with each other, and much of this material has been recovered — yet there is not one known reference to Israel in any of it.

Professor Davies shows that the history of ancient Israel as presented in the books of the Bible is a myth, an ideologically constructed retrojection into the past of the ideas of a later time. Unfortunately, it is not a harmless myth, but a dangerous and sinister one. It is a myth promulgated today by those in positions of power — not because of any esteem that they hold for "holy scripture," but rather because it serves the purpose of shaping public opinion in favor of their political adventures in the Middle East. For too many of our people, the Biblical story of Israel is the present-day justification for American support of the Zionist entity of Israel: a policy that must ultimately bring ruin to its proponents. — Ed Novak
